

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

LETTER OF SUBMITTAL.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1891.

To the Congress of the United States :

In accordance with the act of incorporation of the American Historical Association, approved January 4, 1889, I have the honor to submit to Congress the annual report of said association for the year 1890.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. P. LANGLEY,
Secretary Smithsonian Institution.

HON. LEVI P. MORTON,
President of the Senate.

HON. THOMAS B. REED,
Speaker of the House.

III

ACT OF INCORPORATION.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Andrew D. White, of Ithaca, in the State of New York; George Bancroft, of Washington, in the District of Columbia; Justin Winsor, of Cambridge, in the State of Massachusetts; William F. Poole, of Chicago, in the State of Illinois; Herbert B. Adams, of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland; Clarence W. Bowen, of Brooklyn, in the State of New York; their associates and successors, are hereby created in the District of Columbia a body corporate and politic, by the name of the American Historical Association, for the promotion of historical studies, the collection and preservation of historical manuscripts, and for kindred purposes in the interest of American history and of history in America. Said association is authorized to hold real and personal estate in the District of Columbia so far only as may be necessary to its lawful ends to an amount not exceeding five hundred thousand dollars, to adopt a constitution, and to make by-laws not inconsistent with law. Said association shall have its principal office at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and may hold its annual meetings in such places as the said incorporators shall determine. Said association shall report annually to the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution concerning its proceedings and the condition of historical study in America. Said secretary shall communicate to Congress the whole of such reports, or such portions thereof as he shall see fit. The regents of the Smithsonian Institution are authorized to permit said association to deposit its collections, manuscripts, books, pamphlets, and other material for history in the Smithsonian Institution or in the National Museum at their discretion, upon such conditions and under such rules as they shall prescribe.

[Approved, January 4, 1889.]

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL.

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION,
Baltimore, Md., February 25, 1891.

SIR: In compliance with the act of incorporation of the American Historical Association, approved January 4, 1889, which requires that "said association shall report annually to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, concerning its proceedings and the condition of historical study in America," I have the honor to transmit herewith my general report of the proceedings of the American Historical Association at the seventh annual meeting, held in Washington, D. C., December 29-31, 1890. In addition to this general summary of proceedings I send also the inaugural address of President John Jay, on "The Demand for Education in American History," together with brief abstracts of most of the papers read by members of the Association, Messrs. Ford and Clark's Supplementary Bibliography, and Part I of an elaborate Bibliography of the publications of the State Historical Societies prepared by Mr. A. P. C. Griffin, of the Boston Public Library.

REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS AT SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 29-31, 1890.

REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS AT SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION.

By HERBERT B. ADAMS, Secretary.

The attendance upon the seventh annual meeting of the American Historical Association was the largest yet recorded. One hundred and eight members were present; last year there were eight-seven. There was a large and sympathetic Washington audience at each of the six sessions of the Association. An afternoon reception was given to members and the ladies accompanying them by Mr. and Mrs. William D. Cabell.

During the last days of the old year there were five scientific conventions in the Federal city, four of them upon the same premises, at the Columbian University or in the National Museum. These five conventions were: (1) the American Historical Association, (2) the American Society of Church History; (3) the American Economic Association; (4) the American Forestry Association, and (5) the Geological Society of America. All of these various societies were in session upon the same days, and yet there was no conflict of interest. Each society had its own constituency, and each its own peculiar attractions. There was a certain comity of arrangements as regards time and place, so that it was quite possible for members of the Society of Church History or of the Economic Association to attend some of the meetings of the Historical Association. By special invitation from the Washington Society for the Extension of University Teaching members of various associations met together to listen to a remarkable lecture upon "University Extension" by Mr. Richard G. Moulton, of Cambridge, England. One evening, when American historians and politicians were discussing the subject of cabinet government just over their heads in another lecture hall of the Columbian University, the American geologists were discussing the antiquity of man.

After every evening session gentlemen members of all five associations met socially in the pleasant rooms of the Cosmos Club, corner of H street and Madison Place. These friendly reunions at the Cosmos are the most attractive features of scientific meetings in Washington. It is doubtful whether any other city in the United States could (if it would) furnish quite so agreeable opportunities for the social success of a scientific convention. Washington is rapidly becoming a scientific as well as a social and political center. The fact of five distinct societies meeting there in one week shows that the nation's capital is already recognized as a proper and convenient rallying point for national associations of science.

The American Historical Association has met in Washington for now three years in succession, and each year with an increasing attendance. The advantages of this place of meeting, as compared with any other great city or with a summer resort like Saratoga, become each year more apparent. University men from the old Northwest and from far-away Nebraska pronounce in favor of Washington, even against Chicago, the prospective center of the Western world. Members of the American Historical Association once thought it advisable to pursue an itinerant or missionary policy westward and southward; to swing around academic circles; to indulge in pleasant picnics like those which are now so popular with American "educators" and with the American Association for the Advancement of Science. But other and larger ideas of public usefulness began to dawn upon "the common sense of most" when the Historical Association was chartered by Congress in 1888. The society then became "a body corporate and politic" in the District of Columbia, with its principal office in Washington. The society now enjoys organic relations with the Smithsonian Institution and, through the same, reports its proceedings and progress annually to Congress. Manifestly the American Historical Association can accomplish more through its present connections with Washington and with the United States Government than through any local patronage or any return to the waters of Saratoga.

Among the first fruits of this larger and more national policy is the "Annual Report of the American Historical Association for the year 1889," issued from the Government Printing Office at Washington just before the seventh annual meeting. This report contains the act of incorporation, a summary of the proceedings of the sixth annual meeting, certain selections of public interest from those proceedings, and a partial bibliography of the published writings of members of the association, prepared by Mr. Paul Leicester Ford, the accomplished bibliographer, of Brooklyn, New York, printed and indexed under the careful supervision of Mr. A. Howard Clark, curator of the historical collections of the National Museum and assistant secretary and curator of the association, who is now in charge of its Washington office, established on the ground floor of the Museum itself. Under Mr. Clark's efficient direction will soon be instituted a system of national and international exchange on behalf of the American Historical Association. Its first report to Congress will be mailed, under the Smithsonian frank, to all members, and to all State and local historical societies that now send their publications either to the assistant secretary of the association or to the Smithsonian Institution.

A bibliography of the publications of all the prominent historical societies in this country has long been in preparation, and will soon be published. Such a document would be of great service not only to State and local historical societies, but to all students and teachers of American history. By instituting through the Smithsonian a system of domestic and foreign exchange, the association can rapidly build up a good historical library in Washington. Indeed, such a library already exists in the accumulated books and documents now stored in the Congressional Library and subject to recall by the Smithsonian Institution. By collecting or depositing rare books, historical manuscripts, portraits, etc., in the National Museum the association can soon have a permanent national exhibition that will strongly appeal to American patriotism and public interest and promote historical studies. Indeed, such an exhibition has already begun. In the alcoves of the large hall in which the association met at the National Museum there were showcases full of interesting old books and manuscripts that once belonged to the Washington family in Virginia. Many of them were but recently discovered by Mr. A. Howard Clark, and through him obtained on deposit for the historical section of the Museum. The association held its morning sessions in a most attractive environment, illustrating the development of human inventions and the evolution of man from savagery to civilization.

Of the reading and discussion of papers there seemed to be no limit at one of the morning sessions of the association. Perhaps some attendants upon this convention had resigned themselves to that state

Where congregations ne'er break up
And Sabbaths have no end.

But others differed from this melancholy view and found agreeable variations to the monotony of regular proceedings by strolling about the museum and talking with old friends, visiting the Library of Congress or the State Department, looking at historical collections and manuscripts, listening to the debates of Congress or inspecting the Corcoran Art Gallery. Historical conventions in Washington serve many profitable purposes, social, educational, and scientific. It is perhaps safe to say that some good and useful work was done at luncheons and dinner parties and at the Cosmos Club.

In this connection it is possible to give only a brief review of the more noteworthy literary features of the convention. First came the Hon. John Jay's inaugural address, read by the Hon. William Wirt Henry, first vice president of the association. Mr. Jay emphasized the importance of historical studies for the development of the national spirit and the proper education of the youth of this Republic. Then followed a group of papers representing Canadian history. Dr. Rand, of Cambridge, gave an original and scholarly account of the New England settlements in Acadia. Mr. William Houston, legislative librarian at Toronto, entered by title and abstract a sketch of the work of the first parliament of Upper Canada, 1792 to 1796, which exempted British royalists from French law and forbade the extension of slavery. The most striking feature of the first session was Dr. Bourinot's abstract of an historical paper entitled "Canada and the United States." The time-limit of 20 minutes inspired the author to a spirited résumé of his elaborate and comprehensive work, which covered the relations of Canada and the United States down to the present time. Dr. Bourinot vindicated the right of Canada to an independent national development and emphatically protested against any idea of annexation by the United States. An interesting discussion ensued, in which Senator Hoar paid a generous and eloquent tribute to the people of Canada, and in a quiet but impressive manner stated his American conviction that Canada would come, not by constraint, but by her own free will, into the American Union, if she should ever come at all.

In a later session Dr. Bourinot compared the methods of cabinet government in Canada with the system in practice in the United States. The fact that the best features of British political development are incorporated with the institutional life of Canada, Mr. Bourinot said, was proof of the flexibility of the constitution of the Dominion. He maintained that where the American system is strong it followed English lines; where it is weak, it is because of its inherent rigidity. In opposition to the view of Dr. Freeman Snow, Mr. Bourinot urged that responsible government was compatible with a federal system and a written constitution. Senator Hoar rose to the defense of the American Constitution, which he said was designed in part to protect the people against itself. Ours is a truly popular government. The Canadian system with its threefold veto and its appointed and limited senate holding for life can hardly be called popular. Professor Cohn, of Harvard, who at one session presented a rapid and brilliant sketch of the formation of the French constitution, also exchanged historical and political compliments with the gentlemen from Canada. Edward Eggleston, the historian of American colonial life, participated in the debate and said that American institutions of government were all historical developments from colonial germs.

Mr. Eggleston's remarks upon various papers read in the convention were, by general consent, one of the most interesting and valuable features of the entire meeting. He discussed, in a highly suggestive manner, Dr. Andrews's able contribution to the theory of the village community; also Mr. Morgan's original paper on slavery in New York, and Dr. Weeks's picturesque but doubtful theory of the survival among the Croatan Indians of Raleigh's colonists from Roanoke Island. Indeed this year there was more discussion than usual. Douglas Campbell's theory of the Dutch origin of the written ballot called out historic objections from Profs. Williston Walker, Jameson, and Howard. Mr. Weeden, author of the Economic and Social History of New England, took part with Mr. Eggleston in the discussion of Northern towns and Southern plantations. Dr. William A. Dunning, of Columbia College, tried the Socratic method upon his Virginia friend, Professor Dabney, who maintained that history is a science. It may be here suggested that history is the science of man's progress in society, politics, and civilization. Thought and action must be organic to be historic.

The most important and most scientific feature of the programme was its classification or grouping of subjects. One evening, as we have said, was chiefly devoted to Canadian history. The next morning session was given up entirely to European history. In this field, besides those papers already mentioned, there were Professor Burr's graphic sketch of the fate of Dietrich Flade, one of Mr. Burr's valuable studies in the history of witchcraft; Dr. Gross's strong plea for reform in the study of English municipal history; Dr. Fling's historic account of Mirabeau's speech of May 20, 1790; Professor Francke's new contribution to the history of the liberal student movement from 1815 to 1819, with special reference to Karl Follen, who became an American citizen and an educator of American youth; and Mr. William G. Taylor's interesting review of Bismarck's career.

A second evening session was devoted to American constitutional history. Professor Trent's study of the Phillips case, a Virginia bill of attainder, called forth critical comments from Senator Hoar and the presiding officer, Hon. William Wirt Henry. Mr. Ames's historical survey of the many proposed amendments to the Constitution of the United States was favorably received, and so was Mr. E. O. Mason's justification of the Executive in refusing Congressional demands for information, under certain circumstances. General Mussey outlined his proposed study of bills of rights in State constitutions.

The last morning session was occupied with papers on American economic history. Dr. E. D. Adams, a brother of Dr. Henry Carter Adams, both of whom are now connected with the Interstate Commerce Commission, treated historically the development of the budget in the United States. Dr. Charles H. Haskins presented an original paper of the Yazoo Land Companies, for a study of which the Hon. William Wirt Henry had lent Mr. Haskins manuscript materials. W. F. Willoughby, of the United States Department of Labor, gave a striking account of the rapid increase of governmental activities in this country. The subject of slavery in the District of Columbia could hardly be presented in 20 minutes, but Professor Howard read enough to show the scientific character of his pupil's work. General Birney, of Washington, presented some written remarks upon Miss Tremain's elaborate monograph. At the close of the morning session President Gilman, of the Johns Hopkins University, exhibited a large and beautiful map showing the orographical features of the historic countries about the Mediterranean and made a plea for better representations of physical geography as a basis for historical study.

There was but one afternoon session and that was devoted to American history and historical science. Besides Dr. Weeks's paper and Dr. Dabney's already noted, there was an appreciative review of the political ideas of the Puritans in a literary outline at once sharp and clear, by Dr. Herbert L. Osgood, of Columbia College. General Darling reviewed the historical work of some of the State societies, and Professor Mace presented valuable suggestions regarding the organization and grouping of materials for American history.

At the closing session Dr. William T. Harris, the Commissioner of Education, described some of the philosophical aspects of history. He reviewed the characteristic ideas of historic peoples and reminded his audience that the great contributions of Rome and the Germanic race are ideas of unity and self-government. Perhaps the greatest literary success in the entire programme was Mr. James Schouler's dramatic description of Webster's Seventh of March speech. A pleasing survey of the border-land between the archæologist and the historian was presented by Prof. Otis T. Mason, of the National Museum.

The last and most practical paper of all was that of Prof. J. F. Jameson, of Brown University, on the expenditure of foreign governments on behalf of history. The speaker urged that European countries having had a longer history and having carried the development of historical science further than the United States, we may well learn from them as to governmental policy respecting history, if, as is to be hoped, our Government is to do more for it hereafter. The speaker's inquiries had been directed to the expenditures of European governments for the printing and publication of historical materials, for payments to editors and other workers, in support of archives, and in subventions for historical purposes to learned bodies. The answers were obtained largely from official sources. The speaker described in detail the expenditures of England and other nations, and the mode of administration through which these expenditures are carried on. The speaker then suggested criticisms of the historical expenditures of the Government of the United States, derived from a consideration of European practices. Since 1889 it has no longer been true that our Government spends, in proportion, less for history than almost any other civilized government. But the distribution to different objects gives much cause for criticism. We spend this year $268,000 for the Official Records of the War, about $7,000 for the historical activities of the archives office of the Department of State, and virtually nothing else. We ought to spend much more money on our archives. Even Bavaria, Württemberg, and Baden spend more for this than we. We ought, in the matter of publications, to have some permanent institution through which the opinion of experts can all the time be brought to bear; and its scope ought to include manuscripts not only in the possession of the nation, but in the possession of private persons. Such an historical commission could easily be devised. In devising it the experience of European governments should afford valuable assistance.

Professor Jameson made another valuable suggestion, which was approved by the executive council, that original materials for American political history be presented, with a descriptive statement, at the annual meetings of the American Historical Association, and that, if approved by the council and duly edited by an appointed committee, such materials be incorporated in reports to Congress.

The committee on time and place for the next meeting reported in favor of the holiday season and the city of Washington. The Hon. William Wirt Henry was elected president. The old board of officers was retained, and Mr. Henry Adams, the historian, was chosen one of the vice-presidents. Felicitous speeches upon the progress of the Association were made in closing by President Welling, Dr. Harris, and Mr. Eggleston.

The following persons were either registered or in attendance upon some of the Washington meetings:

THE DEMAND FOR EDUCATION IN AMERICAN HISTORY.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS BY HON. JOHN JAY, LL. D., PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION.

THE DEMAND FOR EDUCATION IN AMERICAN HISTORY.

Inaugural Address of Hon. JOHN JAY, LL. D., President of the American Historical Association.

The American Historical Association enters upon its sixth year under new and favorable auspices, and the country may be congratulated upon the rise and progress of an association with special claims not simply upon American scholars, but upon every thoughtful American who desires his children to understand aright the history and principles of their country. It seems to have sprung into existence under the guidance of our accomplished experts to supply a great national want, and to perfect for the scholars and the people of America a branch of education which to America, of all the countries in the world, is of supreme importance; for the defects in our methods of historic study have been widely felt and frankly acknowledged, and this branch of our education has kept pace neither with the progress nor with the dangers of the Republic.

These considerations give to the American Historical Association a national and a practical importance which Congress has wisely recognized by the act of incorporation authorizing the association to share the advantages of the Smithsonian Institution and the National Museum, and instructing the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution to communicate to Congress reports of our proceedings and of the condition of historical study in America. Our secretary reported in October the titles of some two hundred historical societies in the United States, including a number honorably distinguished during the past century by scholarly management and excellent work. His report shows also the resolutions of the executive council and the circular addressed by its instruction to the State historical societies. The letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution announcing the generous privileges accorded to this association in regard to its collections, exchanges, and the printing and distribution of its reports is definite and encouraging; and the cordial reception of the association by the residents of Washington honorably represents the enlightened sentiment of the Republic.

The instructive papers of our association, especially those of Prof. Herbert B. Adams, Dr. Andrew D. White, and President Charles K. Adams, have given us a full account of the progress of the new methods of historic study in Europe, with interesting particulars supplied by their own large experience. President Adams, in his inaugural, told us of, the latest progress in England at Oxford and Cambridge; of the moderate advance in Holland at the universities of Leyden, Groningen, and Utrecht, and in Belgium at Liege and Ghent, Brussels, and Louvain; of the very remarkable progress in Italy, from the national unification, with its immense archives, notably at Florence and Rome, and with its eminent professors of Florence, Turin, Naples, Venice, Palermo, Milan, Pavia, and Bologna. Then came a reference to the study of history in Germany, of which ex-President White had given so comprehensive and instructive a review, and to its remarkable progress in France at Paris and Bordeaux. As regards America, President Adams reminded us that the methods of work in our institutions of university grade were very different from those in vogue twenty-five years ago, and that several of the professors of history now employed have received their training in the best methods of the Old World. He advised us of the progress at Harvard, under Prof. Henry Adams and President Eliot; at Yale, under Professors Fisher, Wheeler, George B. Adams, and Sumner on constitutional and financial law; at Columbia, under Prof. John W. Burgess in the school of political science, and to which new life will doubtless be added under the vigorous and judicious influence of President Low; at the University of Michigan, where under Dr. White the science of history was lifted to the very summit of promise and usefulness; at Cornell, where the admirable work of Dr. White is being carried on by President Adams himself; and lastly at Johns Hopkins University, whose historic volumes tell their own story, and where so much work has been so well done, and where forty graduate students in history are working with a view to the doctor's degree.

The harmony and helpfulness of the students of the various nationalities of Europe toward each other, and toward the scholars of our land, in furthering the introduction of the new methods of history in the colleges and universities of the world, recall the words of Sir Henry Main: "The only community which, as far as I can see, is absolutely undivided by barriers of nationality, of prejudice, of birth, and of wealth, is the community of men of letters."

America, we are told, is still far behind Europe in the study of history, and Professor Emerton of Harvard declares that "history has been taught very badly in America, or rather, to be honest, it has hardly been taught at all;"* and we are told, too, that the time is passing, in certain lands at least, when historians, one after another, set themselves up to write the panegyric of their favorite period or party, and "each panegyric is an apology or a falsehood." Professor Emerton says—and this seems to be the general opinion of our scholars—that the new principle "is no longer on trial in America; it has come to stay." The importance of history as illustrating the continuing tie which amid all the changes of time connects the present with the past is a constant idea with thoughtful Americans. "The foundations of our Christian culture," says Dr. Eliphalet Potter, the accomplished president of Hobart College, "of our boasted commerce and manufactures, of our science and our government, are as old as history. * * * All the splendid superstructure of art and knowledge in the nineteenth century is built upon enduring foundations, laid by other races as well as by our heathen ancestors and Christian forefathers. The saying of Christ is the motto of the ages: 'Other men have labored and ye have entered into their labors.'"[†] What they did, and the reason and result of their action, make history philosophy teaching by example.

The American student of history can not forget the debt due by America to the world. We may hesitate to join in the boast that we are the latest product of the ages, Time's last and noblest offspring, the Star of Empire on its western way; but the fact that our Republic occupies a position that commands a world-wide influence and imposes upon its citizens proportionate responsibilities, is one that the world recognizes and which we can not ignore. The historic contrast presented by the fact that while we were celebrating the centennial of our Constitution and rejoicing in its strength, the French Exposition was exhibiting fifteen national constitutions, of which fourteen had been adopted and rejected during the last century, was not without significance. Lafayette in his reply to Henry Clay's speech of welcome said that the United States reflected "on every part of the world the light of a far superior civilization;"* and Ticknor spoke for the more enlightened Americans when he felt, on crossing the Pyrenees, "as if he had gone backward two centuries in time." That impartial and philosophic observer, Dr. Orestes A. Brownson, declared that "the American civilization is the highest civilization that the world has ever seen, and comes nearer to the realization of the catholic idea." Nor can we forget that an English representative so eminent as Mr. Gladstone has said:† "I wish to recognize the prospective and approaching right of America to be the great organ of the powerful English tongue."

Mr. Gladstone and the philosophic thinkers of Europe doubtless recognize the truth of a remark by William von Humboldt, that "beyond the sum of creative forces directly presented by events there remains a powerfully active principle which, though not directly manifest, yet lends impulse and direction to those forces and ideas which according to their nature lie beyond the finite, but still permeate and rule the world's history in all its parts." This active force, which history alone discloses and which can not be safely overlooked, Burke recognized when, as if inspired by the historic spirit and judging of the future by the past, in his speech on conciliation he described not simply the American colonists from England, but those from other lands, as marked by a spirit of resistance to the exercise of an authority which they denied. He said:

* * * The religion most prevalent in our northern colonies is a refinement of the principle of resistance; it is the dissidence of dissent, and the protestantism of the Protestant religion. * * * The colonists left England when this spirit was high, and in the emigrants was highest of all; and even that stream of foreigners which has been constantly flowing into these colonies has for the most part been composed of dissenters from the establishments of their several countries, and has brought with them a temper and character far from alien to that of the people with whom they mixed.*

Burke seems to have had in his mind something of the idea expressed by Bayard Taylor in his centennial ode: "In one strong race all races here unite." In 1643 eighteen languages were spoken in the New Netherlands, and historic memories may have suggested to Burke that in the army of Washington were representatives of races which had been the most distinguished in the battlefields of Europe—of Hollanders and Walloons who had in the Netherlands resisted Alva and Philip; of Frenchmen who had served under Coligni and Henry of Navarre, or who had passed through the memorable siege of La Rochelle; of Danes who had fought for their country against Tilly and Wallenstein; of the Englishmen who had battled at Naseby and brought the king to the block at Whitehall; of those who stood with William of Orange or with the partisans of James at the battle of the Boyne; of Swiss who had defended the freedom of their cantons against the trained soldiers of Austria; of the burghers who had maintained against the Duke of Burgundy the liberties of Ghent and Liege; of men who under Sobieski saved Vienna from the Turks; of those who stood with the Dutch at La Hague, or with Charles XII of Sweden against his victorious rival, Peter the Great of Russia. But the advice of Burke and the warnings of Chatham were unheeded, although they were perhaps recalled, when the army of Lord Howe, pronounced by Lord Chatham "the best appointed army that ever took the field," yielded to Washington's hasty levies; and Lord Chatham said to Parliament on the surrender of Burgoyne: "Those men whom you called cowards, poltroons, runaways, and knaves are become victorious over your veteran troops, and in the midst of victory and the flush of conquest have set ministers an example of moderation and magnanimity well worthy of imitation."

The varied nationalities represented by the American colonies give an exceptional breadth to our national history, so closely do they connect us with the nations of Europe, even in the distant past. Freeman tells us that the records of Athenian archives and Roman consuls are essentially part of the same tale as the records of the Venetian doges and English kings, and that the tale of Greece and the tale of Italy brings us at almost every page across the records of the Hebrews, the Phœnicians, and the Arabs. So the local histories of our early settlements carry us back to the shadowy past, connecting us in other ages with the beginnings of national life, changing with time, but carrying onward something of their original power. Take, for instance, the recent interesting paper of Mr. Elting in the Johns Hopkins Studies on "Dutch Village Communities on the Hudson River," which shows similar laws, customs, and form of government with the village communities on the Rhine, some of which linger until to-day. These features, which thus far have been too little noticed even by the historians, recall the institutional relationship of our early villages on the Hudson with those of the ancient Germanic tribes of the Rhine countries, called by Cæsar the Menapii, who occupied the country between the Rhine and the Meuse, and the Scheldt and the ocean. The Menapii, as the descendants of the Hollanders like to remember, "held alliance with the Romans, but never submitted to their yoke at all, nor permitted them to introduce their language, but retained in perpetual use the Teutonic dialect, now Dutch."*

We are reminded that east of the Rhine and in the northern provinces of the Netherlands, Friesland, Groningen, and Dreuthe—"whose free people Rome never conquered, and whose right of self-government no haughty baron ever suppressed"—the industrial spirit of the Dutch and the spirit encouraged by the growth of towns modified the feudal system of Holland to a degree unknown in France or even in England.†

There came to the Hudson River, says Mr. Elting, Walloons from the Spanish Netherlands, Huguenots from France, Puritans from New England, and Waldenses from Piedmont, whose historical antecedents extend beyond the Christian era—all seeking freedom and finding it in New Netherlands. Their descendants are to be found in Kingston, Esopus, and New Paltz, now a quiet village on the Walkill Valley Railroad. This valley reposes near the peaks of the Catskills and the Shawangunk range, with its most prominent point, Sky Top, marking the location of Lake Mohonk, now known as a national center of the thoughtful and practical philanthropy of the Republic in reference to the two races whose claims to enlightenment at the hands of the National Government in the common-school system of the Republic can no longer be ignored, and here, after three centuries, the noblest traits of the Hollanders are recalled by the benign influence that from one of their earliest American homes extends throughout the Republic.

A like forgetfulness of the plainest lessons taught by history is constantly exhibited in our own land, and invaluable public service has been rendered by this association and the Johns Hopkins University in their historic exposition of the policy and principles of the Republic as exhibited in Congressional acts and judicial decisions. Two of their papers illustrate the remark of Mr. Freeman that "law has now become a mainstay of history, or rather a part of history, because a knowledge of history is coming to be received as a part of the knowledge of the law," and the early appearance of these papers shows that the new methods of history recognize its relation not simply to the legislature but to the judiciary, as an independent and essential element of the country, wielding a power that can sit in judgment on the legislative and executive departments, the interpreter of national and State constitutions, and the final arbiter of the constitutional limits to legislation.

One of these papers is that of Dr. Philip Schaff on "Church and State in the United States," in which that accomplished scholar with historic and judicial exactness has quoted the adjudications on this point as a matter "not of doctrine but of fact." His masterly exposition and array of authorities add conclusive weight to the thought that no nation has more reason than our own for tracing the relations between the past and the present, and to the remark of Dr. Herbert B. Adams, that national and international life can but develop upon the constitutional basis of self-government in church and state. Dr. Schaff's paper was entitled "Church and State in the United States, or the American Idea of Religious Liberty in its Practical Effect, with Official Documents." It presents in an appendix the provisions of the United States Constitution for religious liberty, decisions of the United States Supreme Court and of the courts of Pennsylvania and New York upon Christianity as a part of the common law, with the opinions of Judge Story, Dr. Lieber, Judge Cooley, and Mr. Bancroft.

"The State of New York," Dr. Schaff reminds us, "had virtually disestablished the Episcopal Church in 1777, one year after the Declaration of Independence, by repealing in its constitution all statutes and acts which 'might be construed to establish or maintain any particular denomination of Christians and their ministers;' and it ordained that 'the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference shall forever hereafter be allowed within this State to all mankind.'" In the leading case in New York, of The People vs. Ruggles, quoted by Dr. Schaff—when Chancellor Kent delivered the opinion of the court, with the approval of a full bench, including the eminent names of Smith Thompson, Ambrose Spencer, William Van Ness, and Joseph C. Yates—the court held that by the common law now in force here as in England, and wholly irrespective of any question of church establishment, contemptuous words uttered maliciously against Christ or the Holy Scriptures are an offense affecting the essential interests of civil society, where Christianity is recognized as a part of the law and the religion of the people.

That eminent legal authority the Hon. William Allen Butler, LL.D., of New York, in a recent paper on "Religion in the Schools,"* states that 11 years after that decision an amendment was introduced in the New York constitutional convention with the avowed attempt of obviating the effect of the decision in The People vs. Ruggles; and that "after a debate in which Chancellor Kent, Mr. Van Buren, Rufus King, and other eminent jurists opposed the amendment, it was rejected by a large majority, and the provision as to religious liberty was left unchanged, with the judicial construction of it in the case of Ruggles fully recognized, and the same provision remains in the State constitution now in force." Mr. Butler further showed that the constitutional right of the people by their legislature to enact laws for the preservation of the public peace and order on Sundays was distinctly placed, in the leading case of Lindmuller vs. The People, "upon the ground that the Christian religion is a part of the law of the land, and that the Christian Sabbath is one of the institutions of that religion and may be protected from desecration by proper legislation." This decision, added Mr. Butler, "was approved by the court of appeals in the later case of Neun- dorff vs. Duryea, and in the light of these authorities and these judicial constructions of the constitution, it must be assumed that Christianity is, and until abolished by a constitutional amendment will continue in this State to be a part of the law of the land."

The historic facts thus judicially announced, tracing back through the common law the religious faith of the American people, are in accord with the first enactment of the Puritans on board the Mayflower, commencing "In the name of God, Amen," and declaring that the voyage was undertaken "for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith;" with the early laws of the Dutch and the Huguenots, the Swedes and other colonists, some of which are in force to-day, until the day when the Federal Constitution was adopted, according to the record of our national convention, not like the revolutionary constitution of France on a day that ignored the Christian era, but in "the year of our Lord seventeen hundred and eighty-seven." Dr. Schaff's clear exposition is worthy of study by the differing classes who, misled perhaps by the foreign idea that this is a godless and heathenish country, and that the state can not without violating its Constitution teach to its children the principles of morality, have proposed to correct the alleged evil: the one class by supplying to the schools denominational teachings in defiance of the Constitution, and the other by inserting the name of God in the national Constitution. The prevalence and power of the religious sentiment in America thus recognized by the courts has not been unnoticed by the most observant and impartial critics of American institutions.

Dr. Schaff also shows that the United States Supreme Court, in Reynolds vs. The United States, in a recent case affirming the right of Congress to prohibit polygamy in the Territories, held that "Congress can not pass a law for the government of the Territories which prohibits the free exercise of religion. The first amendment to the Consitution expressly prohibits such legislation." And the court quoted Mr. Thomas Jefferson's reply to an address from the Dunbury Baptist Association when he said: "Believing with you that religion is a matter which lies solely between man and his God; that he owes account to none other for his faith or his worship; that the legislative powers of the Government reach actions only and not opinions, I contemplate with sovereign reverence that act of the American people which declared that the legislature should make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, thus building a wall of separation between church and state."

Another paper, by Dr. Blackmar, on Federal and State aid to higher education in the United States, gave a complete historical sketch of national grants in aid of State education, which appeared soon after the denial of these grants had been made with such persistency and emphasis as to confuse the public and the press despite the able argument of Dr. White on "National and State Governments and Advanced Education." Dr. Blackmar quoted Huxley's dictum: "No system of public education is worth the name of national unless it creates a great educational ladder with one end in the gutter and the other in the university"—which recalls Washington's desire for a universal education and a national university; and he spoke of the first educational grants of the General Government, in 1787, to support schools and advance the cause of education. Of that ordinance which declared that "Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged," Webster said: "I doubt whether one single law of any lawgiver, ancient or modern, has produced effects of more distinct, marked, and lasting character." Next in educational importance to the ordinance of 1787 comes the Congressional grant of 1862 providing for mechanical and agricultural schools, with the supplemental act of March 2, 1887, with its far-reaching results, by which forty-six colleges and universities have benefited, thirty-three of which were called into existence by the act.

In 1803 Congress extended the privileges of the ordinance of 1787 to the States in the Mississippi territory, granting the sixteenth of every township for the purposes of common-school education, and one entire township for the support of a seminary of learning. The distribution of the surplus in the National Treasury in 1836 was in its aim, as far as the National Government was concerned, financial and not educational, but in sixteen States it was devoted wholly or in part to educational purposes. Among the States that were specially benefited by national aid to education was Connecticut, which received about 23,000 acres for the education of the deaf and dumb.

A chief point of historic interest prominently noted by Dr. Blackmar was the effect of national aid in developing and strengthening the educational spirit of the States, and since the results of the Congressional grants of 1862 have begun to be seen, there has been an upward tendency of State education. Of the last grant Dr. Blackmar says: "Far-reaching results have already been attained from this well-timed donation, * * * but its chief excellence consists in the stimulation which it gave to State and local enterprise." This historic fact confirming the profound wisdom of the framers of the ordinance of 1787, and of the successive Congresses for an hundred years, is one happily recalled to the country, although, as the Hon. N. H. R. Dawson, Commissioner of Education, said in his letter transmitting Dr. Blackmar's monograph to Secretary Vilas: "The monograph was written with an earnest desire to present facts, and not with a view to prove any particular thesis."

It may be difficult to understand how the country should have required this exposition of our ancient and continuous policy of national aid to State education on a scale without a parallel in history, and with a beneficent effect so marvelous as to astonish the world, but the recent discussion of the subject by a large part of the press showed a singular misapprehension on both of these prominent historic facts with which every citizen should be familiar. It was gravely said that a bill to grant national aid to State education would be a violation of the National Constitution and without precedent in Congressional history; that the ultimate effect of such aid would be "a paralysis of local effort;" that the offer of national aid to a State would be an affront; that its acceptance would be an act of humiliation, inconsistent with manly spirit and State pride; and that national aid, if accepted, would weaken the national spirit of the States, and tend to the neglect of their State schools and the promotion of ignorance and mendicancy.

The Secretary of the Interior has done much to enlighten the American people in regard to the history of national aid to education by the work of Dr. Blackmar, reminding them of the opinions of Washington, Jefferson, and Madison, and the framers generally of the Constitution, on the subject and the action for more than a century of the continental and constitutional Congresses. Additional information in regard to the views of Jefferson on this subject is furnished by a separate work on his views on public education* published this year by Mr. John O. Henderson. Jefferson believed, as shown by one of his letters to Lafayette, that "ignorance and bigotry, like other insanities, are incapable of self-government." In writing (April 28, 1814) to the Chevalier de Oris, the Spanish printer of the constitution which had been adopted by the Spanish patriots, and regretting the union of the church and State, he continued: "But there is one provision which will immortalize its inventors. It is that which after a certain epoch disfranchises every citizen who can not read and write. * * * This will give you an enlightened people and an energetic public opinion." To Wythe he wrote from Paris, April 13, 1786: "Preach, my dear sir, a crusade against ignorance. Establish and improve the law for educating the common people. Let our countrymen know that the people alone can protect us against these evils, and that the tax which will be paid for this purpose is not more than the thousandth part of what will be paid to kings, priests, and nobles who will rise up amongst us if we leave the people in ignorance."

Dr. White, with his large scholarly and diplomatic experience in the various countries of Europe, and his most skillful application of European experience to ourselves, has presented to the country a field of inquiry of great interest, and all true Americans will accept his proposition that "the demand of the nation for men trained in history, political and social science, and general jurisprudence can hardly be overstated." He reminded us that in addition to Congress acting for 63,000,600 people who are increasing in great part by immigration at an appalling rate, with some forty State legislatures, and county, town, and municipal boards innumerable; with executive officers and constitutional conventions and judges of every grade discussing political and social questions and fixing the grooves in which our political and social development will largely run; with the grave questions of the relation of capital and labor, production and distribution, education, taxation, general, municipal, and international law—pauperism, crime, insanity, and what-not policies are being fixed, institutions created, laws made with reference to these questions, policies, institutions, and laws in which lie the germs of glory and anarchy, of growth or revolution.

*Thomas Jefferson's Views on Public Education. By John C. Henderson.

Dr. White quotes an able and devoted foreigner, that it saddened him to see so many of the same lines of policy adopted in America that had brought misery upon Europe. "In various constituted bodies theories have been proposed which were long ago extinguished in blood; plans solemnly considered which have led, without exception, wherever tried, to ruin moral and financial; systems adopted which have sometimes been the tragedies, sometimes the farces, upon the stage of human affairs"—an expression that recalls the warning of Madison more than 100 years ago, that popular government without popular education or the means of obtaining it, is "but a prologue to a farce or a tragedy, or to both." After referring to the prodigious amount of waste and error in dealing with political and social questions, Dr. White remarked that abuses found in France under Louis XIV, and in England under George III, seem to find their counterpart in our own land, with criminal high schools taking large numbers of novices and graduating them masters of criminal arts, and this not from want of integrity, but from lack of adequate training. He based on the same and similar facts the demand for a close study of the political and social history of those people who have had the most important experience and especially of our own; and he supplemented his powerful argument with a startling reminder of the fearful price that has been paid hitherto for the simplest advances in political and social science when achieved by the gradual growth of the human mind. The entire paper of Dr. White, to some of the chief points of which I have ventured to allude, deserves the most careful study as an argument, based on acknowledged facts and enforced by the testimony of scholars, for the general and thorough incorporation of the improved methods of historic study with American education.

There is one point on which the history, especially of England and America, is regarded as teaching a lesson of confidence in their basis of national character and national stability. In England the age of corruption in the time of Walpole was marked, as Prof. Goldwin Smith observes, by the still darker records of faction, misgovernment, and iniquity in the high places both of church and state, and in the political evils and fiscal burdens which have been bequeathed by those bad rulers even to our own times. The English historian reminds us that if corruption had been universal the people might never have lifted up its head again, but that the people received the religion which the gentry and even some of the clergy had rejected. The people preserved the traditions of English morality and English study, and repaired by their unflagging industry and their sturdy integrity the waste and demoralization of the classes about them.

Thus far public corruption, however flagrant, is but partial, even when it may sometimes seem to be almost universal. Goldwin Smith says: "Effort is the law, if law it is be called, of history. History is a series of struggles to elevate the character of humanity in all its aspects—religious, intellectual, social, and political—sometimes rising in an agony of aspiration and exertion, and frequently followed by lassitude and relapses, as great moral efforts are in the case of individual men." The revolution in England, so full of inspiring thoughts and noble deeds that were to fix on a firm foundation the constitutional liberties of the empire, was followed by a relapse into political corruption that indicated a complete swing of the pendulum from the highest to the lowest point of English patriotism. Of this Macaulay said, and our own history may furnish examples of its truth: "Public opinion has its natural flux and reflux; after a violent burst there is commonly a reaction." Goldwin Smith further remarks: "If public life is the noblest of all callings, it is the vilest of all trades," and "the real current of a great nation's life may run calmly beneath the seething and frothy surface which alone meets our eyes."

The question that seems to be forcibly suggested by the paper of Dr. White, and enforced by the teachings of our chief experts in historic studies, American and German, is whether the olden methods of teaching history now prevailing in our common schools and academies should not be at once improved by the general adoption of the scientific method, to the great advantage of American youth, whether their education is to end with the common school or the academy, or whether it is to be continued to the highest course of the university. Nothing could more tend to strengthen and confirm the American character of our common schools, so absolutely essential in fitting our youth for their duties as American citizens, and the historic training to that end will no longer be confined to the select few who enjoy the higher education given in our colleges and universities, but will be shared by the masses, "the plain people," who constitute the great majority, whose character and life are to raise or to lower the standard of our civilization, and whose votes are to elect the rulers and determine the destiny of the Republic.

Our common schools are intended to fit the youth of America for what Arnold calls "the highest earthly work—the work of government;" and that work is becoming more complex and difficult with the advance of our civilization to the Pacific, and with the problems, political and industrial, financial and commercial, educational and social, that in succession or in joint array arise and confront us. To these are added a continuing wave of immigration of unexpected magnitude, and representing frequently civilizations inferior, alien, and hostile to our own. It is true that the more intelligent and better part come to appreciate and cherish American institutions, and to welcome for their children the common school that will fit them for American citizenship, and raise them politically and socially to a higher plane of civilization; but there comes also a vast multitude who in their ignorance are ready to subvert our institutions, to supersede our national principles and rights, which they do not understand, and even in some cases to force into our public schools not only non-American ideas but a foreign tongue.

During the last century, when there was little danger from such influences at home, Washington, desiring for American youth an American character, objected to foreign education as encouraging "not only habits of dissipation and extravagance, but principles unfriendly to republican government and to the true and generous liberation of mankind." The simple and sure mode of inculcating these American principles and ideas is the scientific study of American history. Our great authorities on history-teaching are agreed that rightly to understand, appreciate, and defend American institutions the true plan is to know their origin and their history, and so to learn the true policy required for our safety; and in this light history appears as the true basis of national character and of national wisdom, and there seems no reason to suppose that lessons in history may not be given in our common schools in a way to influence the ideas and character of our children.

Dr. Diesterweg, who speaks with so much authority for the scholarship of Germany and of the world, dwells upon the importance of making historical ideas understood by showing their effect and developing ideal impulses in the pupils, and refers to the regrettable position of Germany in a time not long past, when the most scholarly institutions had no special instructor in history, and when a place was made for history the pupils were burdened with a load of facts. The learned author says: "It is clear that the same impulse and the same dangers threaten the public school of to-day. * * * The most important subjects must be given with sufficient detail to make them interesting." If a question should be raised as to the feasibility of applying to children the improved method, on this point both German and American experts express no doubt. Dr. Diesterweg, in expressing his unwillingness to agree to any plan that purposes to exclude the "silent work of civilization" from an elementary course, quotes Benke as saying: "During the same period, from the eighth to the fourteenth year, the power of understanding, comprehending, thinking, the faculty of developing general truths from special ones, begins to awaken and assert itself." Mr. Thomas Wentworth Higginson, who has happily illustrated his views by his own delightful volumes, said in a paper entitled "Why Children Dislike History:" "The moral of all is that the fault is not in the child, but in us who write the books and teach the lessons. History is but a series of tales of human beings; human beings form the theme which is of all things the most congenial to the child's mind. If the subject loses all its charms by our handling, the fault is ours and we should not blame the child."

We are reminded that the first step in geography is to know thoroughly the district wherein we live, and that American local history should be first studied as a contribution to national history; and President Adams suggested that "the development of local consciousness can perhaps be best stimulated through the common school," with the usual adjuncts of the academy and local libraries, the local press, local societies, and local clubs. It would seem clear from such testimony that there is no reason why the elementary principles of the improved methods of teaching history may not be wisely introduced into the education of our common schools; that there, as well as in our colleges and universities, history may become, in President Adams's words, "an active instead of passive process—an increasing joy instead of a depressing burden."

Of the fascination which the varied European origin of our early colonists will have for American youth perhaps no better example can be cited than the remarkable address of Dr. Richard S. Storrs in 1876, before the New York Historical Society, on "The Early American Spirit and the Genesis of it." I have before quoted this address in connection with American education, but I may be pardoned for a brief reference to it on this occasion as illustrating the point, and as an historic sketch parts of which might be advantageously introduced into every normal school of the Republic, in view of the truth, never to be forgotten, that for good education we must have good educators. Regarding histories as the biographies of communities, and recognizing the fact that we are in the presence of a commanding past, tracing the outlines of the fascinating history of our Revolution, showing that it was the spirit behind our little forces that compelled the events and gave them importance in history, Dr. Storrs recalled the fact that the early settlers of this country were not of one stock, but of many, and that they brought with them a power and a promise from the greatest age of European advancement. With a rapid and masterly pen he portrayed that brilliant century which saw at its beginning the coronation of Elizabeth and at its end the death of Cromwell—a century marked by extraordinary genius, amazing achievements, the decay of authority, and the swift advance of popular power; the age of Raleigh, Drake, Bacon, Shakespeare, and Milton; illumined by printing, and stirred with tumultuous force by the Reformation. Glancing at the vehement public life of Northern Europe, in England, the Netherlands, Germany, and Sweden, he showed that out of this century, so full of enterprise and productive force, came the early settlers of America, bringing with them the energies of the continent, and with the push of a century behind them, forming in their constituent moral life one people, fearless, reflective, energetic, constructive, industrious, and martial; intensely practical, politically active, religiously free, with successful labor as their primary teacher. Hence came the early American spirit in whose light arose the Republic "which interlinks our annals with those of the noblest time in Europe and makes us heirs to the greatness of its history."

Is there any good reason to believe that the American boy with his bright intelligence and active imagination is incapable of understanding the two historic ideas of the continuous and changing movement of human affairs and the permanence of principles, that he can not learn to trace the connection between Runnymede, the battle of the Boyne, Bunker Hill, and Yorktown; the constitutional establishment of civil and religious freedom in the last century, and the constitutional emancipation in our own day? As he reads of the Magna Charta extorted from King John in 1215, and of its confirmation in England some thirty times as was deemed conducive to the liberties of Englishmen; when he recognizes that Charta as the basis of the Petition of Right in 1628, and of the Bill of Rights in 1688, will he not the more appreciate the fact that it was the basis of our Declaration of Independence in 1776, and of the first and latest amendments to our national Constitution?

Already school committees have begun to provide new historic and constitutional histories, primers for children, such as Nordhoff's "Politics for Young Americans," and of elementary works, Jevons's "Primer of Political Economy," and the "Origin of New England Towns;" and what a field is opened for new histories for children by Professor Jameson's announcement that the most neglected field of American history is the field of States, with the suggestion that boys should be early taught "the real homely facts of government," to which the local color added by the annals of the neighborhood would add a homelike and inspiring interest. Upon the integrity and efficiency of the common school depend not only the right conduct of our affairs social, industrial, and political, but the public opinion of the country, of which Webster said: "Moral causes come into consideration in proportion as the progress of knowledge is advanced; and the public opinion of the civilized world is rapidly gaining an ascendancy over mere brute force, * * * and as it grows more intelligent and intense, it will be more and more formidable. * * * It is elastic, irrepres- sible, and invulnerable to the weapons of ordinary warfare. * * * Until this be propitiated or ratified, it is vain for power to talk of triumphs or of repose."

But the public opinion which Webster magnified and which is to subject the world to the empire of reason, is the opinion of an American people thoroughly educated in their own history and their own principles, a public opinion inspired by the intelligence and patriotism of the common school, which, while preparing the way to the college and university, can give all that the nation has a right to demand for her voters—the elements of knowledge, with a true idea of the history and the principles of the republic, and of the rights and duties of citizens. Dr. Woodrow Wilson remarks in his recent work, speaking of the convictions of our great statesmen from Washington to our own day, "No free government can last in health if it lose hold of its traditions in history; and in the public schools these may be and should be sedulously preserved," carefully replanted in the thought and consciousness of each succeeding generation.

The necessity of a thorough and manly training to secure prosperity and strength has been forced, by our example and by the warnings presented by other nations, upon all classes in Europe, the governors and the governed; and Dr. Max Müller says that "every nation at present is trying to improve its material by national education." In this international competition for supreme excellence in the common schools, our republic should be among the first, for the necessity of educating the American children, whether native or foreign-born, for their high duties as sovereign citizens is one that impresses more and more deeply our most far-sighted and earnest thinkers.

Bishop Henry O. Potter, of New York, in his recent address on "The Scholar and the State" before the Phi Beta Kappa chapter of Harvard, after referring to "that eminent and gifted Englishman Prof. James Bryce," and to De Tocqueville with his rare foresight, touched upon the great possibilities of a government so nobly conceived and so finely governed as our own, and upon the fact, noted by De Tocqueville, that the excellence and delicacy of a vast civil mechanism only the more demands intelligent, prudent, and reverent handling, and that "no form or combination of social polity has yet been devised to make an energetic people out of a community of pusillanimous and enfeebled citizens."

An historic view of the difference in the effect upon the strength of a people of a system of education in which the weight of authority is placed on the side of restraining, and a system that develops personal independent action, was presented by the late venerable Father Hecker, of New York, the founder of the Paulists, in his last instructive work, "The Church and the Age." After alluding to the teachings adopted by the society founded by St. Ignatius of Loyola, and to the remark, "Men whose wills never conflict with the authority of the church perinde cadaver, the distinguishing traits of a perfect Jesuit form the antithesis of a thorough Protestant." Father Hecker said: "The weight of authority was placed on the side of restraining rather than of developing personal independent action. * * * The defense of the church and the salvation of the soul were ordinarily secured at the expense necessarily of those virtues which go to make up the strength of Christian manhood. In the principles above briefly stated may be found the explanation why fifty millions of Protestants have had generally a controlling influence for a long period over two hundred millions of Catholics, in directing the movements and destinies of nations.*

The lesson taught by the impressive warning of Father Hecker in regard to the education on which depends the strength and controlling influence of nations, as he points the American people to the statistics of history, confirms the views of the fathers of our Republic and of our wisest statesmen throughout a century as presented by Dr. Blackmar to aid the States in making their school education universal and complete. "The first duty of government," says the Hon. J. L. M. Curry, our late minister to Spain, and now the chief manager of the Peabody fund, "is to develop and use to the maximum degree the brain power of the country. In the use or non-use of this intellectual power lies the difference betwixt nations and epochs." "The end for which the schools are established," says Hon. Andrew S. Draper, the able superintendent of public instruction in New York State, "is the safety of the State. * * * The schools are maintained at general expense to perpetuate the Constitution and to make citizenship safe and secure;" and President Harrison aptly asked in a speech at Galesburgh, "How shall one be a safe citizen who is not intelligent?"

The national interest in education and the importance of a national system and a national standard of excellence are topics which abroad are being carefully studied, and Dr. Max Müller remarks: "The great principle * * * that the school belongs to the State, and that the State is responsible for its efficiency as it is responsible for the efficiency of the Army, the Navy, nay, even of the post-office. It is criminal to sell poison. Would it be carrying the same principle too far if Parliament insisted that no one should open a private school unless the government was satisfied of the wholesomeness of the moral and intellectual food sold in these schools to helpless children?"

* "The Church and the Age." An Exposition of the Catholic Church in view of the Needs and Aspirations of the Present Age. New York: Office of the "Catholic World," 1887, p. 137.

Paternal government, I know, has not a good sound to English ears, but if anybody has a right to a paternal government surely it is those little ones who should not perish."

Our association has an opportunity greater perhaps than ever before enjoyed by any similar institution of impressing upon the American people the profound importance of their own history and of the example and counsels of the fathers of the Republic in reference to the education of the people. The work so well begun indicates the vastness of the field to be explored and the gravity of the tasks yet to be accomplished. Dr. Blackmar's treatise on national aid to State education is still to be supplemented by the history of national aid to State education in the public school—aid that in land alone has exceeded the area of Great Britain and Ireland, securing an American education to the children of the Western States to whom is rapidly passing the controlling power of the Republic. The horizon of historic inquiry, as Prof. Herbert B. Adams has said, should be enlarged "until the whole field of secondary and school education is embraced in the retrospect;" and he reminded us of the truth, which recalls also the inexorable responsibility of educated Americans, that "the broadening plains are best seen from the hilltops." Then came the suggestion to which our countrymen will respond, and especially the accomplished educationists of the Republic, who have a right to speak with the power that belongs to knowledge and position, that with a Secretary of Agriculture holding a place in the Cabinet the Bureau of Education should become a ministry of public instruction, stimulating and strengthening the colleges and universities as well as the school system of the whole country. Then, too, comes the ardent wish of Washington, embodied in his last will and testament but still unfulfilled, of a national university. It is a thought to which the establishment at the capital of a foreign university with a chair devoted to the canon law, a system in antagonism with the Constitution and the common law on which the entire fabric of the Republic rests, gives a new and profound significance.

On all these questions the lessons of history, American and European, throw a world of light, and especially on the point that every teacher in the common school should be well grounded in American history. Whatever the extent, the wealth, or the material power of our country, it will depend chiefly upon the State common school and its American training whether she is to retain her manly, independent American character, the chief element of her strength, the only sure guaranty of her continued greatness. Many of our countrymen have indulged the hope if not the belief that our Republic was destined at no distant time to rule the world more widely than Rome in her proudest days, not by reason of her continental power, but by her example and far-extending influence, non ratione imperii, sed imperio rationis.

If that dream be destined to fulfillment, do not the counsels of our wise citizens, from Washington and Jefferson to our martyr Presidents Lincoln and Garfield, assure us that it will be due to the force of the American idea, taught to the youth of the Republic by the inspiring lessons of American history?

I.—CANADIAN HISTORY.

CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES FROM HISTORICAL POINTS OF VIEW.

(ABSTRACT.)

By J. G. BOURINOT, C. M. G., LL. D., Canadian House of Commons.

This paper was devoted to an elaborate review of the relations of the two countries since the foundation of Jamestown and Quebec in the beginning of the seventeenth century. The past history of America shows that there has been a destiny ever shaping the ends of the Canadian communities as well as of the United States, however diplomatists and statesmen have endeavored to "rough hew" them. The following events were briefly reviewed, and their effects on the two countries were indicated.

The treaty of Paris of 1763; the Quebec act of 1774; the war of Independence, and the coming of the United Empire loyalists into British North America; the treaty of 1783; the American Constitution of 1787 and the ordinance of 1787; the Canadian constitutional act of 1791; the Louisiana purchase; the war of 1812; the treaty of 1818 and the fishery question; the Canadian rebellion of 1837-38, and its causes; the Caroline affair; the reunion of the Canadas; responsible government; the McLeod embroglio; the Ashburton treaty of 1842; the Oregon question and its settlement in 1846; the San Juan dispute; the fishery question until 1854; the reciprocity treaty of 1854-1866; the civil war in the United States; the Fenian raids; the confederation of the provinces; the fishery question from 1866 to 1871; the Washington treaty of 1871-1885; the fishery question from 1885-1890; the proposed Washington treaty of 1888; the Bering Sea question.

The Canadian Dominion, 1890, is then compared with the isolated provinces of a century ago. The whole history of Canada proves that there has been always, among its people, not merely an attachment to England and her institutions, but a latent and powerful influence which, in time of peace as in times of peril, has led them onward in a path of national development which every decade of years has diverged more and more from the great federation of States to their south. The position of Canada in the empire now gives her large influence in imperial councils and in all negotiations and treaties that immediately affect her territorial and other interests in America. Canada is no longer a mere "province"—as Mr. Blaine incorrectly calls her in his correspondence on the Bering Sea difficulty—but a union of provinces and territories extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, legally and constitutionally called a "Dominion," and having large rights under her constitution which practically make her a semi-independent power. Canada has been always ready to agree to a fair measure of reciprocity with her neighbors, but all her efforts so far in that direction are shown to have been fruitless. Canada enters on the future with confidence and tranquillity, and asks nothing from her great competitor except that consideration, justice, and sympathy which are due to a people whose work on this continent has only just begun.

NEW ENGLAND SETTLEMENTS IN ACADIA.

By BENJAMIN RAND, PH.D., Harvard University.

In the introduction the lecturer treated briefly of the long contest which was waged between the French and English for the possession of Acadia. It was shown that upon its possession in large measure depended the fate of this continent as between the rival races. This was thoroughly foreseen by Governor Shirley, of Massachusetts, whose plans for its retention were marked by broad statesmanship. He pointed out the necessity of peopling that province and of garrisoning it from New England.

At this juncture (1749) the English founded Halifax and entered upon vigorous measures to wrest Acadia permanently from the French. Their efforts were consummated in the capture of Louisburg, and Acadia ceased to be a doubtful possession.

During this century and more of conflict, the settlement of Acadia by the English had been almost entirely prevented. The question now arose concerning the source and character of her future people. The English Government desired to partition the province among military settlers. Governor Lawrence, of Nova Scotia, however, very wisely for the development of the province, turned toward New England. A proclamation was issued setting forth the extent and fertility of the country, and distributed throughout New England. But the people of New England required more than fertile lands to induce immigration; nothing less than a charter of rights would satisfy the intending settlers. This was granted by Governor Lawrence, and in 1760 began the first great New England migration to Acadia.

Portsmouth, Boston, Newport, and New London were the principal ports of departure. The people represented not merely the coast towns, but likewise the agricultural counties of the interior of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. In Nova Scotia the townships bordering on the Atlantic were settled largely from Massachusetts (and from this point of view the fishery question becomes very much a family or State affair). The interior counties of Nova Scotia, including the far-famed land of Evangeline, were settled by proprietors from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. This district their descendants have made the very garden of Acadia. The Rhode Island settlers peopled the townships in the vicinity of the ancient town of Windsor as well as townships in New Brunswick. The river St. John received its first English settlement from Massachusetts. Scotch-Irish from New Hampshire located in the townships on the Cobequid Basin. The entire migration between 1760-1770 numbered, roughly, 10,000. These people were largely instrumental in the establishment of representative government in Acadia, and shared later in the introduction of responsible government. They also introduced municipal government into the old townships. The religious and literary features of the provincial life became of a New England type.

From this presentation of almost entirely new historic material the lecturer turned to the more familiar enforced migration of the loyalists. The towns and new townships formed by this settlement were pointed out. Governor Morse's report of 1784 was referred to as the most reliable source of information upon this subject. There were over 23,000 disbanded soldiers and loyalists in the "muster" of 1784. Many of these were people of rank and literary attainments; their influence was of great value in molding and elevating the social and intellectual life of Acadia. The third great migration, which was larger than the New England or loyalist, was from Scotland. These people settled the eastern portion of Acadia, and thus far the fact has justified the use of New Scotland (Nova Scotia).

In these migrations from the older colonies the lecturer found ample compensation for the century and a half during which Acadia was the battlefield of the contesting races; and in the kinship then established he founded the pledge of permanent peace between Acadia and the old colonies of the Commonwealth.

THE LEGISLATIVE WORK OF THE FIRST PARLIAMENT OF UPPER CANADA.

By WILLIAM HOUSTON, M. A., Legislative Librarian, Ontario.

This parliament was created by the "constitutional act," which was passed by the British Parliament in 1791. The "Province of Quebec" had been established by royal proclamation in 1763, shortly after the conclusion of the treaty of Paris, by which Canada was ceded to Great Britain. The limits of that province had been extended by the Quebec act of 1774, and an irresponsible single-chamber council created as a legislature. The influx of British loyalists from the United States after the treaty of Paris in 1783 brought into existence a new community, the members of which were not satisfied with "Canadian law," by which term in the Quebec act French law is designated, or with a legislature not elected by the people. For this new community the first parliament had to make laws, and its first act was one substituting English for Canadian law as the rule of decision in all controversies relating to property and civil rights. Its second act introduced trial by jury in civil as well as criminal cases.

The first parliament sat at Newark, now Niagara, for five sessions, from 1792 to 1797, and passed a number of statutes, dealing with the administration of justice, with matters of a municipal character, with the defenses of the province, with the status of classes of persons, and with the work of legislation itself. One of the most interesting of its acts is the one passed in 1793, "to prevent the further introduction of slaves and to limit the term of contracts for servitude." Slaves had been brought, by special permission of the Imperial Parliament, from the United States, and the statutes mentioned repealed the imperial act and prohibited further importation. On the whole, the legislative work of the first parliament seems to have been of just such a practical and useful kind as might have been expected from those who, before taking refuge in Canada, had known, by practical experience, the working of representative institutions in the adjoining States.

II.—EUROPEAN HISTORY.

THE FATE OF DIETRICH FLADE.

By Prof. GEORGE L. BURR, Cornell University.

Dr. Dietrich Flade, city judge of Trier (Treves), was the most eminent victim of the witch persecution in Germany. In 1589 he was tried, confessed under torture, and was burned at the stake. He has long been believed to have owed his accusation and death to his attempt to check the persecution of others; but the document which might be expected to throw most light on his story—the minutes of his trial—has for a century been lost to research. This manuscript is now in the President White library at Cornell University, and on it Professor Burr's paper was mainly based. He showed that Dr. Flade's death was the result of a plot, of which the governor of Trier, Johann Zandt von Merl, was at the bottom, but to which the Jesuits at Trier and the archbishop himself were consciously or unconsciously parties. That Flade stood in the way of the witch persecution he thought there could be little doubt; but how far he owed to this his death seems to Professor Burr still uncertain.

THEORY OF VILLAGE COMMUNITY.

By Dr. CHARLES M. ANDREWS, Bryn Mawr College.

Dr. Andrews' paper was in the main a protest against much of the loose generalization now prevalent regarding American institutions. The work of the new historical school has given a great stimulus to historical study, but has brought certain dangers with it. The theory of the village community is a case in point. The insufficiency of the data at the beginning of German and English history has made it possible to theorize without fear of contradiction, but with the early history of America the case is different. The theory has been tested here and found wanting, that the town or village community was the primordial germ of the body politic. By a somewhat speculative but interesting analogy Dr. Andrews is led to believe that the early shire in England, the Civitas of Tacitus, and, even going back to earlier times, the tribe itself was the primordial organism, a complete and sovereign unit, and that the enlarged family, the village community, or the mark were a later recognition within the original state. This analogy from the American evidence is merely used as supporting conclusions already expressed by other writers as to the conditions at the different stages of the theory. The second point at which the village community theory has touched America is in the idea of a reversion to our original democratic form of life on the part of the New England settlers. Unfortunately, the supposed democratic character of the Germanic tun as a petty republic with universal suffrage rests solely on conjecture. The evidence is insufficient and the supposition is contrary to known tribal life in that stage of development. Such comparisons are however misleading, and though they do not mean much to scholars they are creeping into text-books and popular treatises, where the effects are injurious. The best panacea for this is a critical comparative study of the political and economic life in New England and Old England at the time of the settlements.*

A PLEA FOR REFORM IN THE STUDY OF ENGLISH MUNICIPAL HISTORY.

BY DR. CHARLES GROSS, Harvard University.

Though the continuity between the past and the present in England should stimulate historical research, she is far behind her neighbors in the study of the past. This fact is well exemplified by the literature of municipal or town history, which falls under two distinct heads: (1) general histories of boroughs; (2) histories of particular boroughs. The first head embraces four principal works: "A Treatise of Cities and Boroughs," by Robert Brady, (1690); "Firma Burgi," by Thomas Madox (1726), "The History of Boroughs and Municipal Corporations," by Merewether and Stephens (1835), and "An Essay on English Municipal History by James Thompson" (1867). Brady's book was written primarily to uphold the royal prerogative. Hence his work is "disgraced by a perverse sophistry and the suppression of truth." Madox was a conscientious, truth-loving scholar, whose book throws much light on certain phases of burghal development. Merewether and Stephens wrote their ponderous treatise to advocate municipal reform. Their material is badly digested, and, in their zeal to reform the present they deform the past. Several of the eleven propositions which they attempt to prove are untenable. Thompson's little book consists mainly of brief sketches of the history of a few English towns. Between these separate essays there is very little coherence. Not one of the above-mentioned four treatises gives a good comprehensive account of general town history. There is great need of such a work. So, too, we have to lament the want of good histories of individual boroughs. Striking faults of local historians are their excessive fondness for purely antiquarian and genealogical studies and their neglect of town records. Much stress is laid on sepulchral inscriptions and Roman urns, while the municipal archives are neglected. Hence little light is thrown on the growth of the borough constitution. The mediæval records of towns are abundant and easily accessible. They invite investigation in the history of municipal government, a rich field of study that has been little explored.

MIRABEAU'S SPEECH OF MAY 20, 1790.

By Dr. FREDERICK M. FLING, Cornell University.

This speech was delivered in connection with the most exciting and most important discussion in which Mirabeau participated during his two years in the National Assembly. During its first year of constitutional debate the assembly had stripped the King of the greater part of his executive power. Of the prerogatives still remaining to him, the right to declare war and to make peace was the most important. In May, 1790, an attempt was made to wrest this also from him. In the same month Mirabeau entered into a secret compact with the King, became his chief adviser and the defender of his rights in the Assembly.

The debate that arose upon the question of peace and war gave him an opportunity to serve his royal client. He was looked upon as the leader of the revolutionary party and his strength rested upon his popularity. To retain the good will of the masses and at the same time to thwart their wishes was a difficult undertaking; but this was the thing that Mirabeau attempted to do.

The radical party wished to delegate the right of making war and peace to the assembly. On the 20th of May Mirabeau made a speech in which he opposed this encroachment upon the King's prerogatives and declared that the right should be exercised by the King and the assembly in common. His project was so constructed that while it apparently divided the power of the sword equally between the King and the assembly, in reality it gave it to the former. The assembly had alone the right to put an end to the war. Mirabeau's speech was so ingeniously constructed that the true meaning yielded itself only to careful study. Barnave fathomed it and presented it in its true shape to the assembly. Mirabeau, to save himself, was forced to abandon his position and to accept amendments to his project, changing the entire significance of it. It then became a decree.

He had won an apparent victory; his adversaries claimed that he had suffered a real defeat. In response Mirabeau published his speeches of May 20 and 22, sending copies to all the departments of France. The Lameths, who had bitterly opposed him, declared that he had systematically falsified the speech of May 20 to render it harmonious with the speech of the 22d and with the decree adopted by the assembly. This charge was true.*

THE FORMATION OF THE FRENCH CONSTITUTION.

By Prof. ADOLPHE COHN, Harvard University.

(1) The present constitution of France is different from the other constitutions that France has had since the revolution, in that it is a growth. The origin may be traced as far back as February, 1871, while it was not completed until the summer of 1875.

(2) The period of growth of France. Situation considered from a constitutional standpoint, at the time of the meeting of the National Assembly at Bordeaux in February, 1871. First step in the direction of a contest in the fall of 1874; the discussion proper begins in January, 1875. The Republicans are beaten by a majority of 34 on the vote of article 1; on the vote of article 2 (amendment Wallon), they win the next day by a majority of one. A stampede of the Orleanists follows, and it is determined that the constitution shall be a compromise between the views of the Republicans and those of the Orleanists. The leaders in the movement, Gambetta and Speaker Buffet. The constitution threatened by the vote of the Pascal-Duprest amendment declaring that the Senate shall be elected by universal suffrage and the consequent president for 7 years from November 20, 1873.

(3) The making of the constitution. In May, 1874, the de Broglie cabinet is upset for urging the Assembly to vote a constitution so framed as to be in appearance neither republican nor monarchical, but destined to become a monarchical constitution, with the Orleanist pretender as King, as soon as the legitimate heir is dead. The unsettled condition of affairs leads to Bonapartist successes, and these again to a conviction of all moderate men that some sort of a constitution must be adopted. The work is taken up in formal convention. Election of Adolphe Thiers as Chef du Pouvoir Exécutif (February 17, 1871); division of parties in the assembly makes constitutional work impossible—for a time at least. Second step: Constitution Rivet: Adolphe Thiers becomes President of the Republic August 13, 1871. He is compelled to resign (May 24, 1873) for urging the assembly to vote a republican constitution. Third step: Marshal MacMahon is elected President, to exercise power under the same conditions as his predecessor. The Fusion: Vain attempt to establish a monarchy. Fourth step: Marshal MacMahon's rude rejection of the Senate bill. A wise ruling of Speaker Buffet shows a way out of the difficulty. The Waddington-Vautrain bill brought in. The Senate bill completed. The constitution voted February 25, 1875. The bill on the relations between the branches of the Government voted (July, 1875), and made a part of the constitution.

(4) The amendments. First revision (June, 1879). The Gambetta plan. Gambetta's fall (January 26, 1882). The second revision (May, August, December, 1884). The weak spot in the constitution.

KARL FOLLEN AND THE LIBERAL MOVEMENT IN GERMANY.

By Prof. KUNO FRANCKE, Harvard University.

Karl Follen, the first professor of German literature at Harvard College and one of the finest representatives of German ideas in this country, occupies an honorable place in the history of American civilization. As an enthusiastic historian and abolitionist he has been eulogized by such men as Samuel May and William E. Channing; Whittier has devoted some of his most touching lines to Follen's memory; his eventful and noble life has been told by his wife, herself one of the most distinguished women of Bostonian society of fifty years ago, in a manner worthy of his character and services. The present paper deals with a phase of Follen's life which until very recently has not been properly understood—his participation in the Liberal student movement in Germany from 1815 to 1819. It appears that Follen was the very heart and soul of that movement, and that it derived from his influence the character of a truly nihilistic conspiracy. The agitation began at the University of Giessen, then spread to Jena and Berlin, and finally embraced most of the North German universities. Follen condemned all existing forms of government as tyranny and usurpation. He proclaimed as the only aim worthy of a good German citizen the establishment of "the one great German republic." He openly declared that the only means of attaining this goal were acts of violence and murder; and actually organized a league of so-called "death brethren," i. e., of young men who pledged themselves to die for the cause of freedom. The assassination of Kotzebue, which can not but be regarded as the practical consequence of Follen's theories, brought the movement to a speedy and abrupt end. Follen himself fled first to Switzerland, and afterwards to the United States, where, supported by La Fayette's sympathy and friendship, he soon rose to prominence, identifying himself with the highest and most progressive aspirations of the time and completely abandoning his former anarchical tendencies.*

BISMARCK THE TYPICAL GERMAN.

By WILLIAM G. TAYLOR, of New York City.

Germany is a land of castes, and German conservatism is an outgrowth of this caste system, and bears the stamp of it. Of the conservatives Bismarck is the leader, but differs from his fellows in his dislike of doctrinaires and of bureaucracy.

The Germans are renowned for their sterling honesty, and this trait is strongly marked in Bismarck. Diplomatic exigencies, however, have often led him to disregard the simple directness that spontaneously occurs to him.

Bismarck was the achiever of German unity, but neither the idea of unity nor the idea of excluding Austria from the Empire were original with him. He conceived the possibility of defeating Austria, and his great merit lies in the strong character which he brought to the task.*

III.—AMERICAN CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY.

HOW THE WRITTEN BALLOT CAME INTO THE UNITED STATES.

By DOUGLAS CAMPBELL, of Schenectady.

We are constantly told by English writers, who, since the close of our civil war, have manifested a great interest in our pedigree, that we are an English race with English institutions. Never was there a greater historical error. As to race we have always been cosmopolitan, as we are to-day. At the outbreak of the Revolution not half of the population of the middle colonies were English, and the other colonies contained great numbers of men of diverse nationalities. As to our institutions, the facts are even more striking; for we have scarcely an institution of English origin, and very few which have even come to us by way of England. How true this is can be seen as we run over the list of the institutions in which we differ from all other countries claiming to be civilized; such as our written constitutions, our Supreme Court, the organization and power of our Senate, the position of our President, our local self-government, our freedom from a state church, and our whole system of transmitting and alienating land. In all these matters we differ from England even to-day. In some other features a resemblance now exists between the two countries, simply because England has been following our example in the matter of free schools, freedom of religion, a free press, the written ballot, the general extension of the suffrage, and in a broad range of reforms in criminal and civil law.

But if our institutions did not come from England, what was their origin? They have sometimes been credited to the inspired artisans and farmers of the Mayflower, but the age of fable in history is rapidly passing away. The present generation demands something other than stories about Romulus and Remus, Numa Pompilius, or the Pilgrim Fathers.

To understand how they came to America, two facts have to be borne in mind: first, the position of the Netherland Republic, of which Holland was the leading state, when America was settled; and, second, the relations between the republicans of Holland and the settlers of America. As to the first question, we have a host of witnesses led by such scholars as Macaulay, Hallam, Taine, and the late Thorold Rogers, professor of political economy at Oxford. Taine says that when America was settled Holland led the rest of Europe in general civilization by about two centuries. Rogers says that "the revolt of the Netherlands and the success of Holland is the beginning of modern political science and of modern civilization."

As to the second question, we have to go for its comprehension far outside the works of American historians. They tell us simply that the Pilgrim Fathers resided for 12 years in Holland, but as to what they saw or learned there we are left in ignorance. They say nothing of the fact that over 50,000 Netherland refugees, driven from their homes by the persecutions of Philip the Second, settled in the counties of England from which New England drew its colonists. Nor do they mention the fact that Roger Williams derived all his liberal ideas from Holland, that Connecticut, which has been well called the "typical American Commonwealth," was founded by men who came directly from Holland, bringing with them the institutions of that country, and that William Penn's mother was a Hollander, and that he took to Pennsylvania simply the ideas and institutions of his mother's land.

Bearing these facts in mind we can understand how the written ballot came into the American Colonies. It was utterly unknown in England until 1872. In 1817 its introduction into that country was advocated by Jeremy Bentham, but it was opposed by all the land owners and the other men who desired to know how their tenants or employés exercised their right of suffrage. The agitation went on for over 50 years, the advocates of the reform constantly appealing to the example of the United States, but until 1872 the English, after the manner of all rude nations, voted by show of hands or oral declaration.

For the origin of the written ballot we have, as in the case of many other American institutions, to go back to ancient Rome. It was used under the republic, and again under the empire in the days of Trajan. But from this time, as we are told by most writers, there comes a break of about 1,500 years. We next hear of voting papers in the Salem Church in 1629; in the election of the governor of Massachusetts Bay in 1634 or 1635; in Connecticut, in 1639; shortly afterwards in Rhode Island; in West Jersey in 1676; and in Pennsylvania in 1683. Thence the system has spread until now the written or printed ballot is used in every one of the United States except Kentucky, where the old viva voce system, derived from the English traditions of Virginia, which only abolished it in 1864, still prevails. Standing alone, this institution might possibly be regarded as an invention of our Puritan ancestors. But it is in fact only a type of American institutions. In 1616, four years before the Pilgrim Fathers left Leyden, there was published in that city a book describing the religious and political institutions of East Friesland. In this book there is given an account of the mode of electing magistrates in the city of Emden, a city which was always the headquarters of English Protestants, one in which some of the Pilgrim Fathers found their home, and the city where William Penn resided before coming to America.

There the magistrates, elected for a year, were chosen by a written ballot. The electors gathered in the town hall, and after a prayer, each one in turn retired to a table and wrote down on a slip of paper the names of his candidates. Then rolling up his ballot he deposited it in a wooden box, with a bottle-shaped mouth, the aperture of which was just large enough to admit the hand. All having voted, the president of the council drew out the ballots one by one, read them off to the secretary, and, after a reading of the tally-sheet, the ballots were consigned to the flames. In view of this account of a mode of voting, which was common in other cities, taken in connection with the fact that this system was introduced solely into the American colonies which were subjected to an influence from the Netherlands, we need ask no further how the written ballot came into the United States.*

A VIRGINIA BILL OF ATTAINDER. THE CASE OF JOSIAH PHILIPS.

By Prof. WILLIAM P. TRENT, University of the South.

Josiah Philips was a laborer of Princess Anne County, who for three years (1775-78) headed a formidable band of robbers in his native county. He helped Lord Dunmore and practiced great cruelty upon the inhabitants. Various attempts were made to capture him—one of which succeeded, but he soon made his escape. Matters came to such a pass that Governor Patrick Henry had to call Thomas Jefferson into consultation as to the best method of putting Philips down. Both agreed upon a bill of attainder. Such a bill was accordingly drawn up by Jefferson and pressed rapidly through the legislature. The original of the bill in Jefferson's handwriting is still in the capitol at Richmond.

Shortly after, Philips was caught; but, in direct violation of the provisions of the bill of attainder, was put on trial for robbery, found guilty, and executed (1778).

Ten years later, in the Virginia convention of 1788, Edmund Randolph, who had been attorney-general at the time of the trial, charged the Virginia legislature with having by its bill of attainder practically murdered Josiah Philips. Patrick Henry, who had agreed to the measure, defended the legislature for passing the bill, but forgot to mention the obvious and telling fact that Philips was not executed under it. Other members, who should have known the particulars, spoke about the case, but all misrepresented the facts.

[Here Mr. Hoar's question as to the reliability of the reports of the convention applies. It was shown in reply that the case was alluded to on several separate days, and that it was impossible for the reporter to have continually and consistently misrepresented the tenor of the debate.]

The case was not brought forward again until 1803, when Judge Tucker, in his edition of Blackstone, cited it as an example of the courage of the Virginia judiciary in setting aside a legislative act that appeared to them unconstitutional. Judge Tucker's views, together with the contrary statements of Edmund Randolph and Thomas Jefferson, were then considered. A brief review was given of the early cases in which a State judiciary had set aside legislative enactments, and the conclusion was reached that it was not probable that the Virginia judges took this step in the Philips case. It was held rather that they probably expressed their unwillingness to condemn Philips under the act of attainder, but did not directly refuse so to do, and that the attorney-general, fearing that his prisoner might escape, indicted him at common law.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

By HERMAN V. AMES, A. M., Harvard Graduate School.

The paper opened with a review of the actual uses which have been made of the different methods of amendment provided for in the United States Constitution. It next passed to a consideration of the subject proper, namely, the amendments proposed to the Constitution.

Upward of thirteen hundred resolutions containing over seventeen hundred propositions to amend the Constitution have been offered in the National Legislature down to the close of the Fiftieth Congress in March, 1889. These naturally fall into four periods.

The first period, embracing the years 1789-1803, and aiming at perfection of detail;

The second period, including the years 1803-1860, and covering general alterations;

The third period, comprising the years 1860-1870, and relating to slavery and reconstruction; and

The fourth period, from 1870-1889, and proposing general amendment.

The general characteristics of each period considered.

The first period is characterized by the passage of the first ten amendments, and the eleventh and twelfth, intended to correct the minor defects in the Constitution. The twelfth amendment did not allay the dissatisfaction with the electoral system, as is shown by the fact that more amendments have been proposed on that subject than on any other.

In the second period were introduced upward of four hundred amendments, covering a wide field of subjects. Propositions contemplating minor changes in the form of government were the most numerous. This being the period of conflict between the broad and strict constructionists, it is characterized by many attempts to confirm or prohibit by amendment practices established by custom. A closer examination of the scattered propositions show that they are indices of the political struggles of the time. The most remarkable fact of the period is that not one of the amendments proposed during these 58 years became a part of the Constitution. Six passed the Senate, in addition one only, on titles of nobility, received the sanction of both branches of Congress.

At the beginning of the third period an avalanche of propositions fell upon Congress, nearly all dealing with some phase of the slavery question. The political and social changes brought about by the war had presented a new set of questions, so that the amendments relating to the legal status of the individual, which previously had been of the least, now became of the greatest, importance. In this period the question of amendment received the most serious attention of Congress; hence it was most productive of results. Besides the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, and the Corwin Amendment passed in 1861, four amendments received the sanction of one House.

The twenty years which form the fourth period are characterized by about four hundred attempts to substantially alter the Constitution in almost every particular. Two classes command attention, the one involving changes in the form of government, the other in its powers. Only four of these received the approval of one House.

In summarizing the results of the four periods we find that besides the fifteen amendments, now a part of the Constitution, only four have been proposed by Congress to the States for ratification. In addition eighteen have passed one House of the National Legislature. Nothing of strength has been added to the Constitution by amendment, except in the case of the reconstruction amendments, and these were carried only after a civil war. Certainly the method is not sufficiently facile to meet our wants. The cause of the difficulty is, to use the words of Chief Justice Marshall, that "the machinery of procuring amendment is unwieldy and cumbrous."

CONGRESSIONAL DEMANDS UPON THE EXECUTIVE FOR INFORMATION.

By EDWARD CAMPBELL MASON, A. B., Harvard Law School.

Six times in the history of the United States the national Executive has refused demands for information made upon it by the National Legislature—once in Washington's administration, once in Jackson's, twice in Tyler's, once in Polk's, and once in Cleveland's.

These demands were supported on two grounds: First, that the information was essential in order that Congress might legislate understandingly, and secondly, that the right of impeachment, to be effective, must confer on Congress the power to compel the executive to disclose any facts in his possession.

The refusals were supported on four grounds: First, that public interest would be injured by the disclosures called for. Second, that the communications were private. Third, that private individuals would be unjustly implicated by a reply. Fourth, that in some of the cases the information called for was not germane to any legislative purpose.

As a matter of principle Congress should be given any information in the executive department which is needed, either as an aid to legislation or for the prosecution of an impeachment, but this right of Congress must be exercised with a due regard to the public interests and the rights of individuals.

But, although Congress may have, under certain circumstances, the right to executive information, it has not the power to compel the Executive to transmit the information. The power can not be derived from the right to try impeachments, for there is nothing to give Congress at such a time greater power than a court would have, and courts can not compel the executive officers of a State or nation to testify when in the discretion of such an officer compliance would be detrimental to public interests.

For a similar reason the power of Congress over legislative witnesses does not apply in the present case.

Back of all reasons is the fact that since the executive and legislative departments are coördinate and independent, Congress can not, without a resort to arms, compel the President to furnish information.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT IN CANADA.

By J. G. BOURINOT, C. M. G., LL. D., Canadian House of Commons.

The principal object of this paper is to compare the methods of cabinet government in Canada with the system in practice in the United States. In the Dominion and in the Provinces the responsibility of the advisers of the heads of the executive authority (the governor-general, representing the Queen, and the lieutenant-governors) to the representatives of the people in the central parliament and in the provincial legislatures is fully established and carried out in conformity with the principles of parliamentary government. Experience shows that those constitutions which are the most flexible are the strongest. In England the constitution is virtually unwritten, and, though Canada works under a written federal constitution, the fact that the best features of British political development are incorporated with the political life of Canada is proof of the practical flexibility of the constitution of the Dominion.

Where the American system is strong it follows the English lines; where it is weak it is because of its inherent rigidity. Under the British or Canadian system the governor-general, his cabinet, and the legislature must act in harmony, while in the United States the President and his Cabinet, on the one hand, and the Congress, on the other, may be at war. In Canada the premier and his colleagues are immediately responsible for the general conduct of administration and legislation; they are bound to have a definite policy upon every matter of grave public interest, and even in private legislation it is their duty to protect the public interests. Under the American system committees do practically all the work, yet can have neither the authority nor the responsibility of the cabinet in England or Canada. The premier having to lead the House, the speaker of the House of Commons can afford to lay aside party spirit and give his decision solely on the merits of the case.

In the United States the Speaker of the House of Representatives must become a party leader; thus he loses weight as an impartial public officer—primarily and necessarily his duty. An able paper by Dr. Freeman Snow in the last volume of the American Historical Association is discussed. Dr. Snow argues that responsible government is incompatible with a federal system and a written constitution, and that under it less interest is taken by the people in public affairs than under the American system. He has ignored the fact that Canada has both a federal system and a written constitution, with a most successful system of responsible government. As to the other points, it is obvious that when the fate of a ministry and its policy may depend upon a debate in Parliament, the people naturally follow the discussions with the deepest interest, and that when each elector knows that he is making his vote at the polls tell for a certain course of executive and legislative policy which must be at once inaugurated if the majority declared for it, he would naturally take a keener interest in public affairs generally. Contrast this system with that of the United States, where the citizens vote at one time for Congress, at another for President, well knowing that neither may have any control upon the other. The people voted the other day against the McKinley bill, and yet it would probably remain in the statute book because the Senate would be unchangeable for years.

Against the opinion of Dr. Snow on various points are cited the opinions of Woodrow Wilson, Bagehot Bryce, Denslow, Taylor, Story, and other able publicists and statesmen who have studied the American system in theory and practice. To introduce Canadian responsible government, it is admitted, would require radical constitutional changes, but the Swiss system is easy of application to the United States. In conclusion, the paper shows how many reasons Canadians have for satisfaction that they live under so excellent a form of government.

BILLS OF RIGHTS IN STATE CONSTITUTIONS.

By Gen. R. D. MUSSEY, of Washington, D. C.

At prior meetings of the association there has been reference to declarations or bills of rights as embodied in the constitutions of various States. The writer of this paper remembers an interesting discussion between two of the honored members of the association as to the effect legally of such declarations or bills of rights. It was contended on one side that these bills of rights are self-operative; and on the other, that they require legislative action to render them efficient. This discussion suggested an interesting research, the results of which have grown as the investigation has proceeded until what was intended to be a brief paper has assumed proportions nearer that of a treatise or monograph. It was found to be impracticable to exhaust the topic and to so condense the statement of it as to permit its presentation at this meeting.

It is purposed to treat the subject as follows:

(1) To consider the origin, in a general way, of bills of rights as embodied in State constitutions, to show their purpose, and to explain their absence from the Constitution of the United States.

(2) To name the different State constitutions in which they are to be found; to group together those enunciating particular principles, rights, or duties; and to analyze the variations found in them, and to discriminate between them.

(3) To show what are self-operative and what require legislative action to render them efficient, and in this connection to refer to the judicial decisions of the various States based upon them.

It is, perhaps, not improper to give a brief illustration or two of the method of treatment proposed.

Taking, for instance, "the right to bear arms," we find that article XVII of the declaration prefixed to the constitution of Massachusetts, adopted in 1780, asserts that "the people have a right to keep and to bear arms for the common defense." The second amendment to the Constitution of the United States (proposed in 1789 and ratified in 1789, 1790, and 1791), provides that "a well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." Section 17, article I, of the Connecticut constitution of 1818 declares that "every citizen has a right to bear arms in defense of himself and the State."

It will be seen at a glance that there may be restrictions of the broad "right to bear arms" which would be consonant with the fundamental law of the United States or of Massachusetts that would not be permissible under the fundamental law of Connecticut. In other words that a law against the carrying of concealed weapons in Massachusetts or the District of Columbia might be construed by the courts on grounds which would not apply to a similar act, if such existed, in Connecticut.

An illustration of a declaration of right that operates proprio vigore may be found in article 24 of the declaration of rights prefixed to the Maryland constitution in 1864, which is: "That hereafter, in this State, there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except in punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted; and all persons held to service or labor as slaves are hereby declared free." There can be no question about the effect of the last clause of this article; no legislation and no judicial construction (such as abolished slavery in Massachusetts) can add to it or detract from it. It is a fair, square, direct, and instantaneous abolition of slavery.

There is a provision in the first Maryland bill of rights, 1776, appearing also in the declarations subsequently adopted with later constitutions "that, in all criminal prosecutions every man hath a right to be informed of the accusation against him; to have a copy of the indictment or charge in due time (if required) to prepare for his defense," etc. One would suppose that this meant that where the Maryland law prevailed the defendant in a criminal prosecution could demand, as of right and without paying for it, a copy of the indictment against him. He would find, however, if he attempted (as a client of the writer did) to do this in the District of Columbia, in which the provision referred to is still in force, that he was mistaken, and that he could only obtain such a copy, no matter how poor he might be nor how voluminous the indictment might be, by paying for it, unless the indictment were for a capital offense; then a statute of the United States would come to his aid. But for all other classes of crime the enactment of means to gratify the beneficence of the article of rights has been omitted.

Recalling the article cited from the Maryland bill of rights of 1864 in respect to slavery as a type of the self-operative declaration of rights, we find in the bill of rights adopted by the same State (Maryland) in its constitution of 1867, in respect to the same subject-matter, a striking example of a "declaration" that enunciates a political principle requiring legislation to enforce. The declaration of 1864 was that "all persons held to service or labor as slaves are hereby declared free." The article of 1867 is, "slavery shall not be reëstablished in this State; but having been abolished under the policy and authority of the United States, compensation, in consideration thereof, is due from the United States." It is submitted that this is a conspicuous instance of the enunciation in a bill of rights of a political dogma which, to have any practical effect, demands a great deal of legislation. It illustrates also what will be treated in the complete paper, the modification of declarations of rights under the influence of changed public conditions and sentiments.*

* The writer will be obliged for any contributions or suggestions from members of the Association or others in respect to this subject.

This fragmentary abstract of the proposed paper has at least this palliation, that it is in the interest of accuracy, brevity, and finish that the paper itself is postponed.

IV.—AMERICAN ECONOMIC HISTORY.

THE HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE BUDGET IN THE UNITED STATES.

By Dr. EPHRAIM D. ADAMS, University of Michigan.

The author reviewed the discussion in the Federal convention upon the constitutional provision restricting the origination of money bills to the House of Representatives. The provision was mainly the result of a compromise, but in so far as it was regarded as a great constitutional principle, its insertion in the Constitution was intended to strengthen the power of the House and to weaken that of the Senate.

The conflict between the Executive and the House of Representatives over questions of policy turned upon questions of financial control. Gallatin succeeded in compelling the Secretary of the Treasury to make regular reports, and the contest closed for the time being with the appointment of the first regular standing Committee of Ways and Means. The reason for the attempt of the Senate to originate general appropriation bills in 1855-'56 is found in the fact that the Senate and the House were at variance with regard to a great question of national policy, i. e. the Kansas-Nebraska agitation.

THE YAZOO LAND COMPANIES.

By Dr. CHARLES H. HASKINS, University of Wisconsin.

Georgia, at the close of the Revolution, claimed the region north of the thirty-first parallel which is now included in the States of Alabama and Mississippi. This territory, called from one of its most important rivers the Yazoo territory, was the field of two great land speculations. The first speculation, in 1789, involving among other things the founding of a colony independent of the United States and dominated by Spain, failed, chiefly through the vigilance of the Federal authorities. In 1795 the State legislature sold more than half of later Alabama and Mississippi for $500,000 to four great land companies. The announcement that with one exception every member who voted for this act was a shareholder in one or more of the companies produced great popular excitement, and the sale was declared void by the next legislature; not, however, before most of the original purchasers had disposed of their lands.

The cession by Georgia of her western territory to the United States in 1802 gave to Congress the task of settling with the new claimants. The claims were supported by Madison and the northern Democrats and violently resisted by John Randolph, who saw in them executive interference, legislative corruption, and an attack upon State sovereignty. The division thus occasioned was the first split in the Democratic party. Randolph succeeded in preventing any action upon the claims until their validity had been affirmed by the Supreme Court in the case of Fletcher vs. Peck, a decision of much importance, since in it, rather than in the more famous Dartmouth College case, is to be found the origin of the present interpretation of the law of public contracts. The final compromise of the claims in 1814 was unquestionably expedient, but by reason of the long delay much of the appropriation went, not to the defrauded claimants, but to those who had purchased from them at a discount.

STATE ACTIVITIES AND POLITICS.

By WILLIAM F. WILLOUGHBY.

In this paper Mr. Willoughby drew attention to a phase in the administration of State governments which has made its appearance mainly since the close of the recent war. The States have within recent years extended their activities to a remarkable extent along the line of the creation of separate commissioners or boards, each with a special class of administrative or supervisory duties to perform. Thirty States have created State boards of health. Fifteen States have State boards of charity. Twenty-five States have boards of railway commissioners, to look after the interests of the people in railway corporations. Banking commissioners have been created in ten States. Seventeen States maintain agricultural experiment stations, in addition to those supported by the General Government. Over twenty States look after their fishery interests through fish commissions. State geologists and botanists investigate the mineralogical and botanical resources of the country. Inspectors and factories in nine States, and inspectors of mines in many others, enforce sanitary and labor legislation. In twenty-three States State bureaus of labor collect statistics throwing light on the conditions of labor and industry.

In like manner was shown how boards and commissions have been created having charge of many other such duties as insurance, prisons, forestry, agriculture, education, etc.

A consideration of the dates of the assumption of these duties by the States illustrates the increasing tendency of the States in these directions. In 1869 boards of health existed only in important seaport towns. No State had a State board of health. The first experimental station was created in Connecticut in 1875. The first bureau of labor was organized in 1869 in Massachusetts, etc. With but few exceptions all of the new functions have been assumed since the close of the war. Many more duties have been assumed in the seventies than in the sixties, and a still greater number in the eighties than in the seventies.

Especial attention was directed to the methods which the States have adopted for the administration of these functions. The object of the States has been accomplished by the creation of special bureaus or departments, or in some cases boards or commissioners, each concerned with some particular class of duties. These bureaus or boards are organized on business principles and are purely administrative. That which formerly, if undertaken at all, was referred to some ex officio officer or a committee of the legislature, with changing personnel and no technical skill for the work, is now referred to a permanent bureau with a trained head and assistants who give their constant attention to their duties and make annual methodical investigations and reports.

A great advance in administrative methods is found in the creation of these departments. The superiority of this plan of government is manifest. Its advantages lie both in the better administration of laws that are enacted and in the provision of more certain grounds for future legislation through their investigations, reports, and recommendations. The custom of originating bills in the bureaus and departments is increasing, and has been followed by the best results. State boards and commissioners have thus become effective powers in legislation, and through their agency are enacted laws that are rational and suited to the ends in view.

The efficiency of these bureaus is further increased by the holding of annual conventions of the chiefs of similar bureaus of the different States, at which experiences and past labors are compared, lines of mutual work agreed upon, and legislation rendered more uniform in the several States. Some attention was also given by the author to the service performed by these bureaus in the education of the people and the diffusion of knowledge. The bearing which this extension of activities on the part of the States has on the question of the decay of State government was commented upon.

SLAVERY IN NEW YORK—THE STATUS OF THE SLAVE UNDER THE ENGLISH COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

By EDWIN VERNON MORGAN, A. B., Harvard University.

Slavery existed in New York during the English occupation as a result of birth, purchase, or punishment for crime. Slaves were classed into negroes, Indians, and whites. Of these negroes were most numerous. Indians were classed as a rule with negroes. Whites, on the contrary, were treated apart. They are the least known and most interesting of all slaves.

Since the majority of slaves were either negroes or Indians, most servile laws relate to them. Their position before the law can be readily defined. By an act of 1702, masters were allowed to punish them "for their crimes and offenses at discretion." A slave, guilty of petty larceny under £5, suffered corporal punishment. In 1710 Hermaine Fisher declared his negro, York, guilty of stealing 6*d.*, had been sentenced to be whipped around Albany.

A few legal privileges, however, pertained to the slave. Bail could be given by a master for his slave's appearance, and for so serious an offense as murder. Though even freedmen were forbidden to hold any "lands, tenements, or hereditaments," the like restriction was not laid on other kinds of property. Sam, late negro slave of George Norton, deceased, complained to the governor that a certain Wilson detained money and a negro, willed him by Norton.

Negroes and Indians were looked upon by our enlightened ancestors as children of the devil, and efforts were early made to Christianize them. The "Duke's laws," of 1664, made some provisions for this object. The task proved difficult. Lord Bellemont wrote in 1699, "The bill for facilitating the conversion of Indians and negroes would not go down with the assembly, they having a notion the negroes being converted to Christianity would emancipate them from their slavery." When an act to encourage the baptism of slaves was finally passed it distinctly stated the baptism of a slave should not set him free.

The main interest of the slave code, however, turns on the regulations to prevent conspiracy. The fear of servile risings was constantly in the thoughts of our forefathers. Their savage legislation governing slave life is only intelligible in the light of this fact. In 1702 it was ordered that not more than three slaves were to meet without their master's permission. They were not to go armed on penalty of receiving ten lashes at the whipping-post. No person without a master's consent was to employ, conceal, or entertain other men's slaves. Several city ordinances reinforced this act. The corporation of New York forbade any slave above 14 years to appear after dark in the streets without a lantern and lighted candle. It was also unlawful to gamble, to drive a cart, to dig oysters in the summer months, or to sell fruit.

Indian slavery pricked the conscience of the authorities. In 1680 the governor and council resolved: "All Indians here have been and are free, except such as have been brought from the bay or foreign ports." But this resolve, if put in force at all, appears ere long to have become a dead letter.

Whiteslavery and the apprenticesystem wereso closely linked it is difficult to separate them. White slaves were, as a rule, either criminals reprieved from imprisonment at home to bond-service in America, or emigrants who served out the price of their passage advanced by a shipmaster. In the first class falls the case of a Scotchman, who, about 1700, for burning a Bible, was sold as a servant to New York. Under the second is a Frenchwoman, who agreed to pay £8 for the passage of herself and four children from London to New York. If she could not procure the money in 6 weeks after landing her children were to be at the shipmaster's command, to be sold at his pleasure.

White criminals were sold also from New York to the West Indies. In 1669 Governor Lovelace ordered Marcus Jacobson to be sold a servant to Barbados. He had been tried by a special commission and sentenced to death, but this sentence was softened to whipping, branding, imprisonment, transportation, and slavery.

SLAVERY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—THE POLICY OF CONGRESS AND THE STRUGGLE FOR ABOLITION.

By MARY TREMAIN, A. M. (University of Nebraska), Lincoln, Nebraska.

In the choice of the seat of Government slavery played no part. Virginians hoped to gain financial advantages from a southern location, and to win a few Southern votes on assumption the capital was given to the South. While the legislation for the Federal District was affected by the character of the institutions in the adjacent States, there is no reason for believing that legislation on other subjects or on slavery in general shows the influence of the Southern surroundings of Congress. It has been asserted that the existence of slavery in the District rendered the Government incapable of resisting the encroachments of the Southern system. There is no proof of this, but it is most certain that the fear of offending slaveholders and endangering the Union prevented Congress from legislating properly on slavery in the District.

The first act passed for the government of the Federal District, in 1801, declared that the laws of Maryland up to December 1, 1800, should remain in force in the county north and those of Virginia in the county south of the Potomac. This was one of the worst of the measures passed. The task of government was rendered a difficult one for Congress, and the people were restless and dissatisfied. Retrocession of the two counties to their respective States, the establishment of a local government and representation of the District in Congress, were some of the remedies discussed. The bitterest complaints were against the laws, and several unsuccessful attempts were made to prepare and adopt a uniform system. The fault of Congress lay less in making a mistake in its first measure of government than in neglecting to remedy that mistake when it was discovered. On the whole, much time and money were spent in legislating for the District. But matters of importance that promised to involve care and discussion were as far as possible avoided. This is true not merely in relation to the slavery question but in relation to other questions.

The law in Maryland against runaways led to the practice of selling, for imprisonment charges, all unclaimed negroes taken up as runaways. The same practice was followed in Washington County. The Committee of the District of Columbia in 1827 though denying the practice reported a bill to amend this law. It was left on the table, however, and another, reported in 1828, failed for the same reason. It is evident that some free negroes were sold into slavery under this law, though the extent to which the wrong was carried can not be known. Probably the local magistrates were careless in committing as runaways persons not proved to be such. The stealing of free persons, or persons bound to service for a term of years, was also very common, and was unchecked by law till 1831. The slave trade was carried on extensively in the District till 1850.

Though many leading men in Virginia and Maryland were opposed to slavery, they believed it would die out, and adopted no plan for its abolition. The earliest movement towards abolition in the District of Columbia was made in 1805. The first attempt at systematic work against slavery in the District began as early as 1816. The next year a pamphlet by Jesse Torrey gives some attention to the subject, and "The Philanthropist" urges the petitioning of Congress for its abolition. A resolution in the House, apparently not adopted, asks that slaves be excluded from labor on the public works. This small matter, however, is soon overshadowed by the great Missouri struggle. Again, about 1824, the question was revived. In 1826 Mr. Miner introduced a resolution that if the committee "are of the opinion that the public interest will be promoted thereby," they report a bill for gradual abolition, and for restriction of the slave trade in the District of Columbia. The resolution was negatived. February 12, 1827, a memorial from citizens of Baltimore was introduced, asking for abolition in the District for the example it would afford the States. The fact that it expressed the hope of influencing the slave States aroused suspicion of the purpose of the petitioners. But the strongest desire on the part of both Northern and Southern members seems to have been to avoid the discussion of an exciting subject. It was stated by one or two Southerners that if the people of the District wished abolition it would be granted them. In 1828 a petition signed by a thousand inhabitants of the District was presented and referred to the committee. Nothing came of it. A great many petitions were presented in this year.

The next year Mr. Miner offered resolutions the preamble of which set forth the condition of the slavery system in the District. The resolutions moved that the committee inquire into the statements made in the preamble, and report on the law in the District, and also inquire into the expediency of providing for gradual abolition. The preamble was lost; the resolutions were adopted. The committee reported a bill for the amendment of the laws. In the debate on these resolutions it is asserted for the first time that Maryland and Virginia would not have ceded the two counties to the Government if they had thought there was any danger of abolition in the District. The committee reporting on these resolutions urge, for the first time also, the harmony of the Union as a reason for supporting or opposing any District measure.

REMARKS BY WILLIAM BIRNEY ON MISS TREMAIN'S PAPER.

The subject chosen by Miss Tremain is one of uncommon difficulty of treatment. Abolition in the District was not the result of local influences, but of national politics; and its causes were of wide range. The facts of slavery were distorted in the fierce controversies that began in 1835 and preceded the civil war, and nearly all subsequent historians saw them through the mists of passion and conflict. The most important errors into which recent writers have fallen may be enumerated as follows:

(1) That the National Constitution was a compromise between six free and seven slave States, and guaranteed the perpetuity of slavery.

(2) That the clause prohibiting the States from making laws discharging fugitives from service or labor was such a guaranty.

(3) That, in their respective cessions of territory for the seat of the National Government, Maryland and Virginia relied upon a pledge of the United States not to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia.

(1) That the slave power, as an organized and aggressive political force, existed from and after 1787.

(5) That the Committee on the District of Columbia had been constituted prior to 1835, as well as after that date, by the Speaker of the House, with a view to maintain slavery.

(6) That the citizens of the District had always been opposed to the abolition of slavery.

These errors are grave. Such of them as relate to constitutional guarantees as the result of compromise between almost evenly balanced free and slave States disappear at once before the stubborn fact that up to 1789 there was but one free State, Massachusetts, and in that one slavery had not been abolished by statute and had in some cases a practical existence. The supposed parties to a compromise guaranty were created after 1835 by the imaginations of heated partisans.

The fugitive-from-service clause of the Constitution can be properly interpreted by none except those who will forget the excitement caused after 1835 and 1850 by fugitive-slave laws and enter fully into the spirit of the people in 1787. The facts show that about the time of the formation of the Constitution leading statesmen attached great importance to making freedom national and to the gradual abolition of slavery after 1808, but very little importance to a fugitive-from-service clause, which was regarded as of temporary nature, except in its application to contract laborers and to apprentices and indentured servants, both of which classes were numerous. Such a clause was inserted in the ordinance of 1787, which made freedom the organic law forever of the great northwestern territory; and no legislator has ever claimed that it guaranteed the perpetuity of any form of service obligation. Madison regarded freedom as the organic law of the National Government. (See reference to his opinion in the fourth chapter of Miss Tremain's essay.) The doctrine of slavery guarantees was an invention of a later day. The framers of the Constitution expected emancipation in some States and the gradual deperdition of slavery in all of them as the result of the provision looking to the prohibition in 1808 of the foreign slave trade. They did not foresee the invention of the cotton gin. Virginia ceded the northwestern territory for the building up of free States, and every Southern man in Congress voted for the ordinance of 1787. But one member voted against it, and he was from the State of New York, which was then a slave State and remained so until in 1827, when it became a free State through the noble efforts of John Jay, William Jay, and their associates.

For the adoption by Congress in 1801 of the laws of Virginia and Maryland for the District, the essayist finds an excuse in the difficulty of improvising a single and new code. Ninety years have elapsed and no such code has been framed. The non-exclusion of slavery from the District was a deplorable departure from the letter and spirit of the Constitution and led to many others. Evidently the Congress of 1801 did not foresee the results of their hasty work.

One of the most valuable parts of the essay is the grouping of the facts which fix in 1835 the beginning of the aggression of the slave power on the free principles of the Constitution. This change of tactics was due in part to the emancipation in 1834 of 800,000 slaves in the English West Indies, following hard upon the abolition of slavery in Mexico. These acts in territory contiguous or nearly so to the slave States were regarded as a serious menace to slavery in them.

The essayist's third chapter is full of painful interest. That sales of men, women, and children at public auction should have been made for half a century in the capital of this Republic, and that free men were sold into slavery for jail fees, is a picture we may turn with its face to the wall for the present.

Justice is done by the essayist to the continuous efforts from 1805 to 1829 of the inhabitants of this District to free it from slavery and the slave trade. The anti-slavery petition of 1828 was signed by more than 1,000 citizens, including merchants, councilmen, and all the judges of the local court.

To Miss Tremain we are indebted for an able, impartial, and scholarly essay. It reflects credit not only on her, but on the University of Iowa, of whose historical seminary she is a graduate.

V.—AMERICAN HISTORY—HISTORICAL SCIENCE.

RALEIGH'S SETTLEMENTS ON ROANOKE ISLAND—AN HISTORICAL SURVIVAL.

By Dr. STEPHEN B. WEEKS, Johns Hopkins University.

After giving a brief historical account of the two efforts of Raleigh to plant a colony on Roanoke Island, Dr. Weeks said that up to the present time it has been believed that the colony sent out in 1587 under the command of John White either perished from lack of provisions or was massacred by the Indians, but recent investigations of the subject lead us to a different conclusion. It is now believed that the colony sent out from England in 1587 did not perish, as has been supposed, but that they moved to Croatan soon after the return of Governor White to England; that they intermarried with the Croatan or Hatteras Indians; that their wanderings towards the west can be definitely traced, and that their descendants can be identified to-day. When Governor White returned to Roanoke Island in 1591 he found that the colonists had removed from that island to a place called Croatan, which was the home of an Indian tribe who called themselves Hatteras, but were called by the white people Croatan Indians. The colonists were seen no more by their English friends. An Indian tribe now living in Robeson County, North Carolina, and in adjacent sections of that State, and officially recognized by the State as Croatan Indians, are believed to be the lineal descendants of the colony of 1587. The arguments in favor of this hypothesis are drawn from the testimony of historians and explorers and from the traditions, character and disposition, language and family names of the Croatan Indians themselves. Strachey, who was in Virginia as early as 1610, heard that the colonists of 1587 were then in the region of the Chowan and Roanoke Rivers. Smith in his "True Relations" indicates that the colonists had joined the Croatans and removed to the interior. John Ledere, heard of them in 1670 and remarked on their long beards which were never worn by full-blooded Indians. John Lawson met some of the Croatans about 1709 and was told that their ancestors were white men. White men came into middle North Carolina in 1715 and found the ancestors of the present tribe of Croatans tilling the soil, holding slaves, and speaking English; the Croatans of to-day claim descent from the lost colony; their habits and dispositions show traces of savage and civilized ancestry; their language is the English of 300 years ago, and their names are in many cases the same as those borne by the original colonists.

THE POLITICAL IDEAS OF THE PURITANS.

By Dr. HERBERT L. OSGOOD, Adjunct Professor of Columbia College.

The earliest political theorists in America were the Puritan clergy and magistrates of New England. So far as American democracy is the outgrowth of ideas, consciously formed and held, it owes its beginnings to them. The great majority of them believed in and advocated democracy; they labored for the establishment of commonwealths more or less democratically organized. Where an aristocratic tendency is found, as in Massachusetts, it arose from a strong desire to preserve the purity of their religious faith, and from fear that it would be overthrown if political equality were established. Their theory of the origin of government was that of natural right and social compact. The earliest Puritan theory of the relation of church and state was the view which affirmed their organic connection for mutual support, though the truth was also recognized that their work lay in different spheres. But within the Puritan left wing (Baptists, Antinomians, Levellers, etc.), owing largely to the pressure of persecution, the doctrine of the separation of church from state was developed, and with it that of toleration. Roger Williams became the great American expounder of this theory.

The Puritans who came to New England were able to carry their democratic theory into practice. There they founded commonwealths without serious opposition. Their English brethren held the same views. They first, under the lead of the Presbyterians, transferred the supreme control of affairs from the monarch to the estates. Then the Levellers, or logical independents, took the lead in the army and brought the king to the block. But as soon as the commonwealth was established it was seen that ideals could not be realized; compromises must be made. Thus, while Puritan theorists continued to advocate a more extreme democracy and separation of church from state (Milton, Vane, Harrington), Cromwell was forced to adopt a more or less reactionary course in order not to defeat the experiment at the outset. Therefore, what the New England Puritans were able easily to accomplish, those who remained in England were forced to abandon. But their ideas, combining with those of the liberal churchmen, survived. They found expression in John Locke, and were revived by the Massachusetts leaders and by Rousseau before the outburst of the revolutionary movement of the eighteenth century.

What now is the origin of the democratic views which all Puritans more or less fully held? They sprang mainly from their doctrines concerning church government. These they derived from Calvin. He taught democracy, or moderate aristocracy, in reference both to church and state. From him, and the Bible as interpreted by him, they derived the idea of the democratically organized church, its members bound together by covenant. This they expounded and defended at great length. Calvin also taught that all social activities should be brought into harmony with the will of God, and made to subserve ecclesiastical ends. Society should be transformed into a city of God. This doctrine, when fully adopted, as it was by Browne, Robinson, Cotton, Hooker, Eliot, and the rest, begat in them the democratic spirit. As was common during the period of the Reformation, they transferred their religious notions to the domain of politics. The idea of covenant gave the basis of a democratic theory of the origin of the state.

STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETIES.

By Gen. C. W. DARLING, of Utica, New York.

Interest in the study of American history is certainly increasing, and in the promotion of this study the historical society contributes no mean part. It is the point of attraction for those whose tastes are similar, and it gives opportunities for the preparation of papers which often in a brief form embody the results of much careful research. The maintenance of historical societies greatly depends upon the efforts and enthusiasm of a few individuals, and the burden of responsibility usually rests with them. Although the stream does not rise higher than its source, yet the historical society reflects the growth of historic interest in the community which it represents.

When the fact is taken into consideration that many active organizations of this kind have no convenient place of meeting, it is wonderful to note the persistency of life which they maintain. There are many encouraging features, however, connected with this work, not the least of which is the valuable aid rendered in some localities to the historical societies by the States where they exist. In some cases the government has promoted the objects of the society by causing to be published the original records of the State, or by an annual appropriation sufficient to meet its needs.

General Darling then read the results of his investigations as to the records of different historical societies and their achievements. The names of the societies mentioned are here given: Maine Historical Society, incorporated in 1822; New Hampshire Society, incorporated prior to 1824, when its first volume of transactions was published; Vermont Society, Massachusetts Society, the American Antiquarian Society of Worcester, Massachusetts, founded in 1812; the Rhode Island Society, for which the state has published ten valuable volumes; Historical Society of Newport; Connecticut Historical Society, for which the State has published fourteen volumes; New York Historical Society, organized in 1804, which began its publications in 1811; the Long Island Society, which has a property valued at more than $150,000; the Buffalo Society, incorporated in 1863; the Chautauqua Society of History, organized in 1883; the historical societies of Cayuga, Waterloo, and Jefferson County.

Of the Oneida Historical Society General Darling spoke as follows: "The Oneida Historical Society, founded in 1876, had for its first president Hon. Horatio Seymour, who held the office until his decease, February 12, 1886. It has been the aim of this society to preserve the history of the locality where its field of labor lies, and the monuments at Fort Schuyler, Oriskany, and Whitestown, as well as the publications of this society, show that it has done some good work."

Mention was also made of several other New York societies, after which the speaker referred to the New Jersey Society, the Pennsylvania, the Delaware, the Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Wisconsin, Iowa, Tennessee, Minnesota, Nebraska, and California societies.

ORGANIZATION OF HISTORICAL MATERIAL.

By W. H. MACE, A. M., Cornell University.

A close analysis of a wide range of historical facts leads to the following conclusions concerning the nature of history :

(1) That there are two sets of facts in history, one that is external and more or less accidental, and another that is internal and fundamental ; (2) that the first are man's deeds and the other his thought and feeling ; (3) that these deeds or events are the signs of the thoughts and feelings of the people ; (4) that in history the student must regard events as a means to the understanding of thought and feeling of the people as the end ; (5) that history deals with a people's thought and feeling in the process of growth ; (6) that this growth obeys the laws of continuity and differentiation ; (7) that the understanding of history requires the student to take ideas as germs and trace them through all their stages and forms of evolution, thus putting continuous and parallel threads of thought through the entire subject ; (8) that the growth of thought and feeling under the law of differentiation gives five well-marked phases, and that the law of continuity gives each of these phases a great center of life—for political ideas the government, for religious the church, for educational and culture influences the school, for industrial customs occupation, for social life the family ; (9) that these five institutions with their accompanying thought and feeling are five great parallel lines that give linear continuity to the subject of history ; (10) that the student must follow the growth of an idea till it is embodied, by law or custom, in one or more institutions ; (11) that history is not confined to the study of politics in the ordinary sense of that term, but includes the entire institutional life of the people ; (12) that while the five sets of institutions with the life that centers around them are widely differentiated in many respects, yet they are so vitally connected that growth in one always affects the other; (13) that the life of a people, the thing history deals with, is an organic whole, and that the student must trace transverse, intricate, and mutual actions and reactions, as well as linear lines of movement.

The preceding discussion shows that the "Growth of Institutional Ideas" is the fundamental notion in history, and hence its organizing idea. The organizing idea of history has three functions: (1) it interprets and integrates the events of history; (2) it furnishes the standard for testing the relative value of historical facts; (3) it gives the basis for the division of history into its organic parts. In the process of interpretation and integration the mind discovers the same thought and feeling in a number of different events, and thus unites them in thought. By this process the student makes our history into an intelligent whole by discovering that all its facts give expression to a common idea—the growth of the people's thought and feeling. All the great facts of our history can be given their true rank in the subject—their proper co-ordination and subordination, by finding out how much each fact contributed to the growth of institutional ideas. The event that contributed most to this growth and development is the event having the highest historical rank, and the one that contributed least holds lowest rank, while those that aided to the same extent hold co-ordinate rank. In obedience to the law of continuity, history presents no gaps in its course of development. But we find its phenomena subject to another great law, that of differentiation. It is the movement of institutions under this principle of life that enables us to find divisions in the line of growth. In the separation of the subject of history into its parts, perfect organization requires three things: (1) That the parts be discovered in the subject and not be invented and applied; (2) that for any series of co-ordinate parts there must be but one basis of division; (3) that the basis of division be the same as the basis of integration. This means that we must drop below the surface-play of events to the "growth of institutional ideas," the organizing principle on which our history as a whole is integrated, and ask what the great differentiating features of our institutional life are. The answer gives us three great forms of development between 1607 and 1860: (1) The growth of English ideas into local institutions;

(2) the growth of local institutions into the form of a nation ;
(3) the development of the spirit of nationality. It is now proposed to illustrate further the nature and process of organization by an application to the period of revolution as a whole and to some of its parts.

The Revolution is the period that marks the growth of thirteen isolated groups of institutions into the form of a nation. Guided by the law of continuity the student searches for the germs of this period far back in the preceding one. The threads of colonial unity grew stronger under the following influences: Common race, common commercial interests as against England, common dangers from French and Indians, common struggles against the aggressions of crown officials. These facts are sufficient to prove that even in the period of local institutions and interests new impulses were beginning to differentiate themselves from the prevailing characteristics of the time. The real nature of the thought movement of this new period is foreshadowed in the lines of growth indicated. It was a movement from isolation to union. The movement was fairly under way when England gave a great impetus to it by attempting to break up the smuggling trade near the end of the French and Indian war. All the great events of the Revolution from the writs of assistance to the constitutional convention of 1787 touch this movement of union. The growth of this idea of union is the organizing principle of this period. It is the finding of this idea of union in the series of events called the Revolution that enables the student to see it as an organically related whole. Not only this, but it is by means of this same idea that the multitude of facts are given historical rank—are coördinated or subordinated. With this done the period is no longer a chaos of facts, but each one stands in the place assigned to it by its own historical significance.

But the general idea of union is too general for groups of facts smaller than the period. For the sake of the organizing idea as well as for a more concrete content for individual facts the idea of union must be pushed out into all the shades of meaning that it took on in its process of evolution. In obedience to the principle of logical division and in harmony with the laws of historical evolution we do this by discovering differences in the sentiment of union. By examination two are found: union against England dominating thought and feeling from 1760 to 1783, and union on domestic questions dominating all questions touching the relation of the States and the General Government from 1775 to 1779. These two ideas of union organize the two great coördinate phases of the Revolution. Union against England is therefore the common content of all the great events between 1760 and 1783. Whether we study the Massachusetts circular letter, the convention of 1774, the Declaration of Independence, Washington's retreat through the Jerseys or Burgoyne's campaign, their greatest common significance is the relation of union to them as cause and their relation to it as effect. But union against England has two phases: union to secure the rights of Englishmen dominating events from 1760 to 1775, and union to secure the rights of man dominating events from 1775 to 1783.

The growth of union to secure the rights of Englishmen is the first phase of the Revolution. It was the inspiration of this idea that first made American thought and sentiment one and concentrated their efforts in every struggle, from the writs of assistance to the battle of Lexington. Each one either consciously aimed at or unconsciously produced a union to obtain the rights common to all Englishmen. To trace the mutual connection between the individual events of this series and this great idea—to see each of them producing it or produced by it, or both—is to interpret and integrate them. Let us apply the process of interpretation and integration to some familiar fact, say the stamp act Congress. This requires two things: (1) That the Congress be seen as the outgrowth of the union and coöperation already in existence; that it be seen as the culmination of the agitation in town and county meetings and of the resolutions and petitions of colonial assemblies; (2) that the meeting and its work be traced back into the current of the struggle out of which they grew, stimulating and giving new impulses to the movement to secure English rights.

It is quite possible to put a more specific content into this Congress—union against internal taxation; but we have carried the illustration far enough. In light of this process we may see in the stamp act Congress a perfect gradation of ideas. Beginning with the lowest degree of generality we find that it expresses the determination of the people to secure the repeal of the stamp act, thus becoming a member of the smallest of the various series to which it belongs. Rising a step higher we find in it the idea that is common to all the great events between 1760 and 1775. We may find in this Congress the more general idea of union against England, thus giving it place and meaning in a wider range of fact; it is now allied to the battle of Bunker Hill, the Declaration of Independence, Valley Forge, the treason of Arnold, and the surrender of Cornwallis. Again, as embodying the more general idea of union, an idea that threads every great event of the American Revolution, the stamp act Congress strikes hands with the transformation of colonial into State governments, the Articles of Confederation, Shays' rebellion, the cession of western lands, the formation of the Society of the Cincinnati, and the constitutional convention of 1787. Rising once more and finally, in the scale of generality, we have in this event an idea that permeates all the facts of our history—an idea that under the law of continuity has given us a history—the evolution of the life of the American people. What is true of this event is true of the whole period of Revolution, and what is true of this period is true of our entire history; namely, that it can be organized into a hierarchy of ideas.*

IS HISTORY A SCIENCE?

By Prof. R. H. DABNEY, Ph. D., University of Virginia.

Defining science to be sytematized knowledge of casually-connected facts, the speaker pointed out that no science is perfect. Innumerable details in astronomy, or meteorology are incapable of calculation or prediction; and that such is also the case with history furnishes no ground for denying it the name of science. Great labor has been expended in this century in the investigation of not only the facts of history, but also of their causes and effects. More and more the conception of resistless law in human events is gaining ground. But the question whether the deeds of nations are governed by law may be reduced to the question whether the deeds of individuals are so governed. That such is the case the speaker showed by illustrations proving that, under given circumstances, the actions of an infant, a child, a youth, a man, may be predicted with certainty. Youth and age, moreover, with their different characteristics, depend not upon a man's volition, but upon causes wholly beyond his control. Each nation, too, if not prematurely cut off, passes through the phases of infancy, youth, maturity, and old age. As a switchman, by deflecting the rails, can change the direction of a train, so a Cæsar or a Napoleon can occasion a change in the direction of national movement. But, just as the switchman neither creates nor violates the physical laws according to which the train is propelled, so the statesman neither creates nor violates the sociological laws according to which nations live and move and have their being.

WEBSTER'S SEVENTH OF MARCH SPEECH.

By JAMES SCHOULER, of Boston.

Daniel Webster still lives in American memory as a consummate statesman, an eloquent orator, and a man who walked this earth the living personification to beholders of all that was Godlike and intellectually profound. But his fame will shine to posterity, not enveloped, as once, in the incense of idolatry, but rather as of a man who, with all his omnipotent endowments, was, like Achilles, very human—human not only in simple tastes and affections, but in frailties, besides—and more especially in a passionate though patriotic ambition. Nature in Webster was always stronger than the arts of discipline.

The 7th of March speech still bears the ominous title of that date on which it was delivered. It was in the year 1850, and upon the subject of adjusting the grievances between North and South, between freedom and slavery, with reference to our new domains, California, Utah, and New Mexico. Instead of supporting what was known as the Administration policy, which was in effect to admit California with her free state constitution, and remit other agitating subjects to the background, Webster, after deep deliberation, took his stand upon compromise between slavery and freedom. To all intents, he followed Clay, and supported what, after President Taylor's death, passed into legislation as the compromise measures of 1850. Those compromise measures were insisted upon, while Clay and Webster lived, as a final and irrevocable settlement between North and South for harmony of the Union; but in reality that settlement proved but a truce which lasted a few uneasy years.

Mr. Schouler proceeded to criticise the 7th of March speech, and to consider Webster's probable motives for making it. The speech and the course Webster pursued in carrying out its principles offended Massachusetts and New England, and made a schism in the Whig party at the North which produced the speedy downfall of that national party.

THE BORDER LAND BETWEEN THE HISTORIAN AND THE ARCHÆOLOGIST.

By Prof. OTIS T. MASON. U. S. National Museum.

The first part of Professor Mason's paper relates to the difference of material on which the historian and the archæologist work, their unlike apparatus, the great dissimilarity of processes followed by them, and the apparent disagreement of their results. In short, the two men are defined.

The border land is then defined. For this purpose the times and the lands open to investigation are arranged into four groups or periods—the present, the antiquarian, the archæological, classical, and prehistoric, and the ultrahistorical. In the archæological period are two subdivisions, the one historico-archæological, the other absolutely prehistoric.

The word "historic" covers not only the peoples that are civilized enough to record their own history, but the works of travelers and others who have written about unlettered races and peoples.

The paper then shows that in each "culture area" the method of exploration, the times involved, the whole problem has a treatment of its own, and that we can not follow the methods of one of these areas in describing another.

The whole purpose of the argument is to show that the best results must follow a happy understanding between the two investigators. Indeed, the linguist, the folk-lorist, the patent attorney, the man of affairs, the artist, besides all the fraternity of natural science, are necessary to a correct result.

Furthermore, the introduction of coöperation by our great institutions and societies is demanded if the border land of history and archæology is to be pushed backwards so as to reclaim a large area of its hither portion to the domain of history.

BROWN, ALEXANDER. The Genesis of the United States. A narrative of the movement in England, 1605-1616, which resulted in the plantation of North America by Englishmen, disclosing the contest between England and Spain for the possession of the soil now occupied by the United States of America; set forth through a series of historical manuscripts now first printed, together with a reissue of rare contemporaneous tracts, accompanied by bibliographical memoranda, notes, and brief biographies. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York, 1890, and William Heinemann, London, England, 1890.

Two volumes, pp. i.—xxxviii, 1-1157; 108 portraits; 11 maps and plans; 6 title pages in fac simile, and 61 autographs. Electrotyped.

Reviewed in Atlantic Magazine for November 1890; The Critic, November 29, 1890, p. 277.

The object of the work is to give as complete an idea (through narrative evidence, biography, and illustration) as now is possible of the movement by Englishmen, during 1605-1616, for securing for their country and their religion all that part of America lying between 34° and 45° north latitude.

FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, editor. An Account of a Plan for Civilizing the North American Indians Proposed in the Eighteenth Century. By John Daniel Hammerer. Edited by Paul Leicester Ford. Brooklyn, N. Y.: Historical Printing Club, 1890.

Edition, 250 copies.

About the middle of the eighteenth century John Daniel Hammerer issued a two paged folio tract suggesting a method of civilizing the American Indians. Probably the first to suggest such a scheme, both his attempt and his tract have escaped all notice from the historian and bibliographer. Yet it marks a departure in our history deserving attention, and the tract is therefore here reprinted, from the only copy now known to be in existence.

FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, editor. A letter to Albert Gallatin on the French Claims to the Newfoundland Fisheries, written October 1, 1822. By Richard Rush. Brooklyn, N. Y.: Historical Printing Club, 1890.

12mo, pp. 40.

A careful and able investigation of this much vexed question, by one of the ablest of our diplomats. It reviews the history of the fisheries both before and after the American Revolution and touches upon the American interests involved.

FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, editor. Condition of the Indian Trade in North America, 1767, as described in a letter to Sir William Johnson. By Sir Guy Carleton, governor of Canada. Brooklyn, N. Y.: Historical Printing Club.

12mo, pp. 16.

Edition, 250 copies.

An interesting detail of the Indian or fur trade between the French and Indian war and the Revolution, affording a valuable insight into the causes which prevented Canada from joining in the latter war, as well as into the rivalry and jealousy between the thirteen colonies and Canada. It is printed from the original manuscript.

FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, editor. Proceedings of a Council of War held at Burke Jail, Georgia, January 14th, 1779, with a Narrative of the Subsequent Proceedings, and the Proclamation issued by Lieut. Col. James Ingram. Edited by Paul Leicester Ford. Brooklyn, N. Y.: Historical Printing Club, 1890.

12mo, pp. 20.

Edition, 250 copies.

Now first printed from the original manuscripts, detailing events in the Revolutionary contest unnoticed by all writers. It relates to a military movement in Georgia early in 1779, and contradicts the historians of that State in a most essential point.

FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, editor. My Services and Losses in Aid of the King's Cause during the American Revolution. By Stephen Tuttle, Justice of the Peace and Deputy Surveyor of the Colony of New York. Brooklyn, N. Y.: Historical Printing Club, 1890.

Edition, 250 copies.

Stephen Tuttle, a resident of northern New York, was a prominent loyalist, who held office before the Revolution under the King's Government, and was active in his assistance to that side during the war. He narrowly escaped being hung by Arnold, and gave secret aid during the Burgoyne campaign to the British. Finally he fled to Canada in 1779, and his property was confiscated by the Americans. He filed a statement of his services and losses with the English Government, which is here reprinted.

FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, editor. Report on the Management of the Estates Sequestered in South Carolina by order of Lord Cornwallis in 1780-1782, by John Cruden, Commissioner of Sequestered Estates in South Carolina. Edited by Paul Leicester Ford. Brooklyn, N. Y.: Historical Printing Club, 1890.

12mo, pp. 27.

Edition, 250 copies.

Among the endeavors to reëstablish the civil government in the Southern States, after their eventual reconquering in the campaign of 1779-'80, was included an organization intended to till the lands of those engaged in open rebellion against Great Britain. For this purpose the negroes who had been stolen or escaped to the British lines were set to work on these plantations under the management of John Cruden, a Charleston merchant. Of the success of the attempt we have here his report, which is now for the first time printed from the original MS., and which is a document of very considerable Revolutionary and State interest.

FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, editor. A Short History and Description of Fort Niagara, with an Account of its Importance to Great Britain. Written by an English prisoner, 1758. With a view of the fort. Edited by Paul Leicester Ford. Brooklyn, N. Y.: Historical Printing Club, 1890.

12mo, pp. 18, plate.

Edition, 250 copies.

Fort Niagara was second in importance only to Quebec of the line of forts with which France endeavored to circumscribe the English possessions in America, and the fall of which in 1759 decided the nationality of the whole Ohio Valley, even before Quebec and Montreal were captured. A year before this fort was taken, an English prisoner, who was presumably Capt. Jonathan Carver, had escaped from confinement there, and wrote a description of the fort, which is here printed, together with his sketch of the fort.

FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, editor. A Handbill Advocating American Independence, inspired by the English ministry, and written and published at London in March, 1778, by Israel Mauduit. Edited by Paul Leicester Ford. Brooklyn, N. Y.: Historical Printing Club, 1890.

12mo, pp. 21.

Edition, 250 copies.

A most curious production, written by a pensioned writer of the British ministry, at the instigation of Lord North, and distributed to the members of Parliament the first day of the session after the signing of the French-American treaty. With the historical introduction it gives a key to an incident in the Revolutionary war never as yet noticed in history.

FORD, PAUL LEICESTER, editor. My Services and Losses in Aid of the King's Cause during the American Revolution. By Isaac Wilkins, Member of the New York Assembly, etc. Brooklyn, N. Y.: Historical Printing Club, 1890.

12mo, pp. 23.

Edition, 250 copies.

Isaac Wilkins was one of the ablest loyalists in New York, and played a most important part in the beginning of the Revolutionary contest. To his pen have been referred the famous A. W. Farmer tracts, and his motion against the Continental Association in the New York assembly had a far-reaching effect. Compelled to fly by an armed force, he sought refuge in England, where his services were recognized by a pension from the Government. This is reprinted from a hitherto unpublished paper.

PATTERSON, GEORGE. The Portuguese on the Northeast Coast of America and the first European Attempt at Colonization there. [7 maps.]

Proceedings of the Royal Society of Canada. Quarto, Dawson Brothers, Montreal. Edition, 1,000 copies. Not electrotyped.

This work might be entitled, A Lost Chapter in American History. It traces the presence of the Portuguese on the northeastern coasts of America, not only from their historians, but from the names still remaining both in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. It also describes what has been hitherto generally overlooked in their attempt to found a colony in Cape Breton, before the arrival either of De Monts at Port Royale, or the Puritans at Plymouth Rock. Of this colony the author believes he has found the remains.

Reviewed in London Times, October 23, 1890. (The book has just been published and other reviews have not yet appeared.)

This book offers a concise compilation of the facts relating to the Icelandic discovery of America contained in the original MSS. Every Icelandic vellum MS. bearing upon this subject has been examined, and the history of each MS. is given, together with the reference to the discovery which it contains. The Sagas which treat of the discovery are given in full in facsimile together with normalized Icelandic texts, and English versions of these texts. The texts and translations are accompanied by copious notes in which the important questions involved are considered.

AMERICAN STATISTICAL ASSOCIATION. Collections of the American Statistical Association. Vol. I. Boston, 1847.

8vo, pp. x, 566.

Statistics of towns in Massachusetts; Heights, latitudes, and longitudes of eminences; Statistics of population; Statistics of taxation in Massachusetts. By J. B. Felt. Issued in 3 parts; published in 1843, 1845, and 1847, respectively.

Part I of vol. 2 of the Collections, comprising Memoir of the life and character of George Cheyne Shattuck, by Edward Jarvis, pp. 1-7; Statistics of comb-making in Leominster, 1832, by C. C. Field, M. D., pp. 8-16; Memoir of American discoveries, colonization, commerce, and fishery, from Newfoundland to Florida, both inclusive, down to 1830, by Joseph B. Felt, LL. D., pp. 17-184; The financial revulsion of 1857, by Samuel H. Walley, pp. 185-160; Letters on the money crisis of 1857, by Nathan Appleton, pp. 161-173; The connection of occupation with longevity, by Edward Jarvis, p. 176; The increase of human life, by Edward Jarvis, pp. 177-231, was printed in sheets, but never printed as a volume, as the sheets were burned in 1872 at the printing office where they were stored. The following were printed separately from the same forms as the above, but independently paged: Dr. Jarvis's "Memoir of Dr. Shattuck," and Walley's "Financial revulsion." Dr. Jarvis's "Increase of human life" was issued with a paper cover in pamphlet form with the paging of the Collections, and 1,000 copies were printed by the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company with independent paging and a title page. The Massachusetts Historical Society possesses a copy of the sheets of pp. 1-126, the Boston Athenaeum of pp. 1-176, and the Boston Public Library pp. 1-16, 176-231, of this unpublished volume. These probably constitute all that was saved of the same.
